Clinton Begins Flight to a Showpiece Summit

Tiananmen Square Casts Shadow on Visit

By John F. Harris and John Pomfret Washington Post Service

Over the next nine days, Presideot Bill Clinton will meet with Chinese peasants io a village where the per capita income is $400 a year, hold a "roundtable discussioo" with young entrepreneurs prospering in Shanghai and witness the historic transition under way in Hong Kong a year after British rule

But the most enduring image of his trip is likely to come from another of its scripted moments: when he stands at attention before People's Liberation Army troops at a welcoming ceremony Saturday morning beside a place that has become a synonym for state-sponsored brutality: Tiananmen Square.

The journey that Mr. Clintoo began from Washington on Wednesday afternooo promises to be the most closely scrutinized overseas journey so far of his presidency. The first state visit by an American leader to China this decade is coming at a time when Mr. Clinton's policies aimed at 'engagement" with Beijing and the motives behind them are under hostile scrutiny in Congress and by human rights groups.

U.S. and Chinese officials say they expect few if any major breakthroughs by the time President Clinton, Hillary Rodham Clinton and their daughter, Chelsea, depart for home oo July 3.

Deals that the administration had been pursuing ardently for months — including agreements to have China formally join a missile anti-proliferation pact and gain membership in the World Trade Organization — have not materialized.

Mr. Clinton and his aides bave publicly defined their goals for the summit in less tangible terms. The mission, they said, is about changing perceptions, both in the United States and in China, about the purpose and value of forging closer relations between the world's most powerful nation and its most

President Clinton is facing criticism forhaving approved a Chinese satellite lannch that was sought by a major Democratic Party cootributor despite Justice Department warnings that the approval might compromise a criminal investigation into a suspected national security breach.

There is another Justice Department probe into wbether the Chinese may have tried to huy U.S. influence by making illegal and surreptitious campaign contributions.

Human rights activists, noting China's repression of political dissidents and religious worship and such abuses as forced abortions to control population growth, have accused Mr. Clinton of putting commerce before principle in his effort to craft what he calls a "strategic partnership" with Beijing.

A Plea to China on Violence

Renounce '89 Crackdown, Ousted Party Leader Urges

By Steven Mufson Washington Post Service

BEIJING - Zhao Ziyang, the former Communist Party leader, who was ousted on the eve of the Jane 1989 crackdown on prodemocracy demonstrations, has written a letter asking the present Communist Party leaders to admit that the military and police violence against student-led protesters was a serious mistake.

With President Bill Clinton due to arrive in China on Thursday night for a nine-day visit, the Reuters news agency obtained a copy of Mr. Zhao's letter The letter stated that the June 4, 1989, killing of bundreds of civilian protesters was "one of the biggest buman rights problems

Mr. Clinton, the first American president to visit China since the Communist leaders ordered troops to open fire on the demoostrators, is under attack from many members of Congress and buman rights groups in the United States for agreeing to attend an official welcoming ceremony next to Tiananmen Square, which has come to symbolize the turn for the better in Sino-J.S. Telations, wrote Mr. Zhao, who had once been general secretary of the Communist Party and who now lives under loose bouse arrest in

Beijing's Main Goal: To Gain Respect

By Erik Eckholm
New York Times Service

BEIJING -- China would love for President Bill Clinton to come here and announce that Taiwan will get oo more U.S. weapons, that China's application to join the World Trade Organization is near approval and that the economic and military sanctions the United States imposed after the 1989 crackdown on student demonstrators will be lifted.

In truth, as leaders here already know, during the state visit beginning Thursday, China will get few if any of the policy changes it wants. And yet, China's leaders and people are ecstatic about the visit, the first hy an American president in nine years and one that is already being hailed as a great step forward in diplomatic relations. This summit meeting means so much to China for both symbolic and practical reasons. Symbolic, because the Chinese clearly feel that by his presence Mr. Clinton, leader of the world's oumber one economic and political power, will confer new status oo China as a major international player. Practical, because China's leaders are convinced that friendly ties with the United States are crucial to their ambitious goal of estab-lishing a more market-oriented and prosper-

What China seeks most right now is not so much the things that get discussed at meetings, such as trade or aid or rocket science or even a cave-in on Taiwan. It is, in a word, respect.

The Chinese wear their country's painful history on their sleeves and invariably bring it up in discussions of foreign policy. After centuries of bumiliating invasions and treaties, after recent decades of terrible civil war and then the chaos of Mao's Cultural Revolution from 1966 to 1976, China feels it is finally on its feet. Its economy has surged, its leadership is stable and China is more than ready to take its rightful place.

"This visit means that China finally has been odied by the world," said Xiong Zhiyong, dean of the Foreign Affairs College in Beijing. "The American administration is recognizing the importance of China."

The leaders here bope that the Clinton visit will mark, if not an end to world disapproval of the 1989 massacre of hundreds of students around Tiananmen Square, at least tacit agreement to push the lingering ghosts to the side. For President Jiang Zemin personally, to stand again beside Mr. Clinton, following his touted tour of America last year, may cement his stature as a statesman able to take up where the late Deng Xiaoping left off.

At a more practical level, friendly ties with the United States — and along with that, a stable, peaceful environment in Asia, which Chinese-American cooperation can also foster — are seen as vital to China's domestic

Deal to Acquire Cable-TV Giant Gives AT&T Broader Reach

$48 Billion Purchase of TCI Opens Possibility for Company To Enter Local Phone Market

By Paul Farhi and Mike Mills

WASHINGTON — AT&T Corp. agreed Wednesday to acquire Tele-Communications Inc. in a $48 hillion stock and debt deal that would merge America's largest long-distance phone company and the second-largest cahle-television concern.

The company, with estimated annual sales of $60 hillion, would be able to offer one-stop shopping to consumers for virtually all electronic services: longdistance and cellular-phone calls, cable-TV and highspeed Internet access. With TCI's wires serving some 14.4 million households, AT&T would have the ability eventually to provide local telephone connections.

TCI's A-shares closed $1.0625 higher, at $39.75 in New York, and AT&T fell $5.125 to $60.25.

An AT&T-TCI deal would revive a failed strategy of the early 1990s: to combine phone and cable companies. Each industry has kept its distance from the other in recent years after the collapse of Bell Atlantic Corp.'s proposed $26 billion acquisition of TCI in 1993. Visions of phone companies offering television service — and cable operators selling phoce service - have failed to materialize.

AT&T is gambling, however, that this deal will be different. TCl is well on its way to upgrading its system for new digital services, the company has said. For the first time. AT&T would have its own lines into millions of American homes through TCI's cables.

The Internet, which hardly existed in 1993, would be an important new service for AT&T to send over the

The deal would be the latest in a chain of megamergers in the past year, fueled by a lifting of federal regulation under a new telecommunications law, that has transformed the U.S. telecommunications industry. Most of the mergers, bowever, have been cases of similar companies' buying out direct competitors.

Under the deal announced Wednesday, AT&T will pay $50.71 a share for TCI's widely traded Class A stock. AT&T also will assume $11 hillion in TCI debt and pay $5.3 billion to buy back AT&T sbares related to TCI's Teleport Communications Group and At

A TCI source, speaking on the condition of an-onymity Tuesday, said AT&T initiated the talks with the company and had made an attractive preliminary offer. This executive suggested the deal was "pro-competitive" because it would someday enable AT&T to use TCI's local cable wires to compete in the local telephone market against such emerging telecommunications combinations as SBC Communications Inc. and Ameritech Corp., WorldCom Inc. and MCI Communications Corp., and Bell Atlantic and Nynex Corp. "I don't think it was do-or-die for us," the TCI executive said. "It's the yen "when it is appropriate but not when it is inappropriate."

He had words of praise and caotion for economic plans announced by President Boris Yeltsin of Russia, saying that the Russian leader had "articulated exactly the right kinds of measures" but that it was now crucial that they be carried out. Concerns about the Russian economy have compounded worries about the Asian crisis.

Mr. Summers met over the weekend in Tokyo with officials from industri-alized nations and 10 Asian countries, and he said that Japanese authorities had offered welcome assurances.

But, he added, "We remain very concerned about Japan's economic and financial situation."

That trip by Mr. Summers, the Treasury Department's top official on international matters, came on the heels of the U.S. intervention, the first of its kind by the Clinton administration, and a plunge in global markets June 15 that was touched off by concerns about a spreading Asian crisis.

The central bank action, coupled with promises for action made by Prime Minister Ryutaro Hashimoto in a phone call to President Bill Clinton, had temporarily stopped the downward slide of the

Whistles Heard Around the World

2 Contested World Cup Calls Dash Some Hopes and Spark Riots

Compiled by Our Staff From Disputches PARIS - The power of a referee's whistle could hardly be more profound. Two controversial fouls - two cases of apparent incidental contact — in two games Tuesday at the World Cup led to street celebrations on different sides of the world, but left two losing coaches angry, bitter or perplexed. Norway - not Morocco - is in the second round of the soccer tournament because of a penalty in the 89th minute that gave the Norwegians a stunning 2-1 victory over the defending champion, Brazil. It is the first time Norway has made it past the first round. The game didn't matter to Brazil, which had already clinched first place in Group A, but Mario Zagallo, the Brazilian coach, couldn't help hut raise the proverbial eyebrow to the decision by the American referee Esiandiar Baharmast that Junior Baiano's bump with Tore Andre Flo, a Norwegian striker, as the two battled for position was worthy of the most decisive of pun-

"I don't really know what bappened there," said Zagallo, shrugging his shoulders. "I don't have a problem with the referees, but FIFA does."

It was a problem for the Moroccans, who thought they had qualified with a 3-0 victory over Scotland until they learned that Norway had staged its amazing Morocco's players wept on the field. Coach Henri Michel kicked the bench, then hugged each of his players. And he hadn't even heard about the dubious penalty that did his team in.

"All of us, we and the players are extremely disappointed," Michel said. "I want to pay tribute to an excellent and an outstanding team, and I want to thank them from the bottom of my heart." For truly bitter words, turn to Cameroon's Claude Le Roy, over a call that cost his team a probable winning goal and a second-round berth in a 1-1 draw with Chile. "I can accept a lot of things, but I can't accept that one," Le Roy said. "I'm sorry we were eliminated, especially on a decision that was an incompetent

The Clinton Horde Descends on Beijing, Wired and Armored

By John M. Broder New York Times Service

ASHINGTON This is no ordinary circus. The horde President Bill Clinton to China on Wednesday numbers more than 1,000 people and includes a blue goose, a presidential seal, and a pair of road runners. The presidential entourage and its paraphernalia fill four passenger planes and several large C-141 military transports. The White House is taking 60 tons of communications gear, as many as 10 armored limousines and enough bottled water so that the president and first lady will not have to open a tap to bathe in the luxurious Chinese guest houses and five-star hotels where they will be staying on their nine-day trip.

The swarm includes six members of Congress, five cabinet officers with their own retinues, a chief of staff and a deputy chief of staff, a national security adviser and a deputy national security adviser, a press secretary and a deputy press secretary. Five stenographers. Two two-member White House television crews. A valet for the president and a hairdresser for Mrs. Clinton. The president's private secretary and the White House staff secretary. Speech writers and rewriters; doctors and lawyers, 375 reporters and photographers. Snipers, com-mandos and bomb-sniffing dogs. And countless lords aleapother departments.

All this for a summit meeting in Beijing and postcard visits to four other cities that even the White House says are expected to yield few concrete results.

Chinese officials and U.S. diplomats in China are appalled and amused. A bewildered senior American in Beijing told a visitor that he was told to expect

1,200 people when Mr. Clinton arrives. That may not be far off. White House advance people have rented 350 cars in Shanghai alone. Even in comparison with China trips by previous presidents, the size of the royal court is astonishing.

When Richard Nixou made his historic journey to Beijing in February 1972, he was accompanied by 300 people. The of-ficial party numbered 34, and only 87 members of the press were allowed to cover the visit. The White House and the American media wanted to send at least twice as many people, while the Chinese demanded a much smaller number. Weeks of bargaining resulted in 300 even-

"By today's standards, it was a modest group, but the Chinese were shocked by the huge horde of people coming, both White House staff and the numbers of press we requested," said Winston Lord, an aide at the time to Henry Kissinger and later ambassador to China.

rather than travel with the official party.

The shock to the Chinese had worn off a bit when Gerald Ford visited Beijing in December 1975. Records from the Ford library indicate that the contingent had grown to about 450 people, including 170 American journalists. The trip was less newsworthy than Nixon's, but in those years, for most American news organizations, it was a rare opportunity to get into agan's visit to Beijing. Xian and Shanghai in April 1984, the traveling party had grown to nearly 600 people, including a hnge increase in the Hollywood stage managers brought into the White Honse to assure photogenie coverage. The press corps had grown to 260.

George Bush's 40-hour visit to Beijing in February 1989 was an anomaly, a hastily arranged trip essentially tacked onto his journey to Japan for the funeral of Emperor Hirohito. Records from the Bush library indicate the traveling party was about 100 people smaller than Mr. Reagan's entourage.

John Podesta, the White House deputy chief of staff coordinating the Clinton visit, said officials who wanted to make the passage, and that a decision was made early on not to invite business executives. Mr. Clinton is under fire for accepting campaign contributions funneled through a Chinese military official and for approving the sale of a satellite by a company under investigation for leaking sensitive technology to Beijing. Thus, it was an easy call to keep CEOs off Air Force One. About 800 people joined Mr. Clinton on his recent trip to Africa but that party included corporate executives. Secretary of State Madeleine Albright will fly in with the president. Also going are Treasury Secretary Robert Rubin, Trade Representative Charlene Barshefsky, Commerce Secreculture Secretary Dan Glick-

Counting deputies, aides and support people, the official party numbers 100, Mr. Podesta said, and "another 500-600 will float in and out around this trip." 'We've never had a trip quite this large," he said. White House officials say it is impossible to calculate in advance the overall cost of the trip because the expenses are paid by numerous government agencies and because many of the bills arrive for months after the trip has ended.

But for a sense of scale, news organizations have been advised that each accredited reporter can expect to pay $15,000.

Ethiopian Roundups of Eritreans Harden War Mood

tually making the trip.

By Karl Vick

NAIROBI - It may be a war no one wants, over land rich mostly in dust, between peoples who until recently regarded each other as brothers and sisters in arms. Nevertheless, the conflict between Ethiopia and Eritrea shows no signs of ebbing and many of hardening.

There will have to be a few more baules. I'm afraid," a senior adviser to President Issaias Afewerki of Eritrea said with a sigh recently. And in the following days, while diplomats from a half-dozen countries fanned fading hopes of peach both sides continued moving troops to the front.

There were other movements as well. More than 700 Eritreans who had been living in Ethiopia were loaded onto trucks and driven hundreds of miles to the border. As many as 5,000 more await a similar fate after they were rounded up by Ethiopian authorities and detained in a pair of open camps near Addis Ababa, the capital, according to Human Rights Watch/Africa. The advocacy group, based in New York, condemns the expulsions as harassment of civilians.

"Only men," said a Human Rights Watch official, Suliman Baldo, of those expelled. "They've left families

The Ethiopian government calls the forced expulsions militarily necessary. Sciome Taddesse, the government's spokesman, said that Ethiopia had targeted local officials of the Eritrean People's Liberation Front, the party that governs Eritrea and has an office in Addis Ababa, as well as an Eritrean community organization and business people suspected of supporting the enemy effort. In addition, Eritreans in "security-sensitive posts," such as telecommunications and the electric company, were obliged to take a month's leave but were not forced out of the country. Ms. Selome said. More than a halfmillion Eritreans live in Ethiopia, by the government's count.

The Eritrean government admits to no similar policy toward the estimated total of 100,000 Ethiopians who reside within its borders. But many of them have been lining up outside the Ethiopian Eral assy in A sauca, the living an expital, in search of the documentation that would assure them re-entry into their home country if they are forced out of Eritres.

In their way, the expulsions represent the most confounding fracture yet in relations between the two countries, erstwhile allies whose populations, militaries and fates appeared to be bound tightly together as recently as a few weeks ago.

"We didn't think a thing like this could happen," said Solomon Abraha, a travel agent in Asmara. "I'm still not out of the surprise of it."

The complications only begin with the fact that the governments of both Ethiopia and Eritrea grew out of rebel movements that in 1991 together defeated a repressive Marxist regime ruling Ethiopia. Eritrea, which had been an Ethiopian province, voted to become independent and became a nation in 1993. The neighbors maintained an open border and the level of official military reference book cantioned readers that the arsenal of one might be shared with that of the other.

What makes the specter of mass expulsions so confusing is the extent to which heritage is shared as well Even Eritreans and Ethiopians sometimes have trouble telling one another apart. As Foreign Minister Seyoum Mestin of Ethiopia said in defending what he termed the "very few" expulsions, the countries are linked by "blood, culture. history, economy, trade and all other

Intermarriage has been commonplace for adversations, especially between Eritreans and natives of Tigre, the northwestern Ethiopian region that gave birth to the Ethiopian rebel movement and borders Eritrea. In fact, the mother of President Issaias of Eritrea is from Tigre and an Eritrean is the mother of Prime Minister Meles Zenawi of Ethiopia. The two men, who for years led their rebel forces in concert with one another, have had a falling out. Now Mr. Meles threatens to teach his former ally "a lesson."

The years of shared struggle are remembered in the trenehes. "The fact that the people of Tigray are our friends is always in the grapevine," said Negusse Beya, an Eritrean and a prisoner of war who was made available to reporters by Ethiopian officials. "In fact, some say our brotherhood, our friendship was sealed by the blood of two peoples. But they also say that the real problem is Badame." Badame is the heart of a 160-square-

Election Is Seen as a Fall Preview

The Associated Press

ALBUQUERQUE, New Mexico - In a closely watched time-up for the fall congressional elections, Republicans retained a New Mexico seat held by their party for oearly three

Heather Wilson, a Republican and a former arms negotiator in the Bush administration, defeated Phil Maloof, a Democrat and a millionaire state senator, in a special election Tuesday for the vacant seat of Representative Steve Schiff, a Republican, who died of skin cancer in March.

Ms. Wilson becomes the first woman from New Mexico to serve in Congress in 50 years. Her victory in the Albuquerque-area district was a setback for Democrats, who now will be outnumbered by 12 seats in the House of Representatives.

Hillsry Rodham Clinton and Tipper Gore campaigned for Mr. Maloof in the closing days of what became the most expensive congressional campaign in New Mexico history.

"So much for Democrat dreams of wielding the gavel anytime soon," said the Republican National Committee's chairman, Jim Nicholson. "This victory slams the door shut on any Democrat hopes for regaining the House."

With 99 percent of precincts reporting, Ms. Wilson had 52,357 votes, or 45 percent. Mr. Maloof had 46,217 votes, or 39 percent. A Green Party nominee, Robert Anderson, had 17,565 votes, or 15 perceot, and was a key factor in the outcome of the race.

Ms. Wilson said she could be sworn in later this week. She will serve the rest of Mr. Schiff's term through this year, though she has to run against Mr. Maloof and Mr. Anderson again in November since all three have been nominated to run for a full two-year term.

"Whatever the outcome, we still have November," Mr. Maloof said.

Ms. Wilson, 37, was secretary of the state Children, Youth and Families Department before she resigned to run for Congress. She is an Air Force Academy graduate and Rhodes Scholar and once served on President George Bush's Nacional Security Council staff.

Mr. Maloof, 31, is the scion of a prominent New Mexico family that made a fortune in liquor distribution, banking, hotels and casinos. He spent more than $1,5 million of his own money in the campaign.

Amish Culture Clash 2 Young Men From Faith on Trial In a Biker Gang's Cocaine Dealing

By Hanna Rosin Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON - Federal prosecutors in Pennsylvania have accused two young Amish men of bnying cocaine from a gang called the Pagan Motorcycle Club and distributing the drug to other young members of the religions group at parties known as "hoedowns."

"We've seen plenty of underage drinking cases but a drug case is unheard of," said John Pyfer, who is representing Abner Stoltzfus, 24. The other defendant is Abner King Stoltzfus, 23, who is oo relatioo.

The case, which is being heard in Lancaster County, underscores the vulnerability of the Amish, who have seen suburban development and tourism encroach on their long secluded lives.

The suburbanites and the tourist gawkers have made it difficult for the Amish to close their eyes to what they consider the corrupting infloences of modern lifestyles. Members of the faith do not have electricity or plombing in their homes and they still make their way around in horse-drawn buggies. The two accused men belong to the most conservative wing of the faith, the Old Order Amish. Most Amish work as farmers or craftsmen and do not stray far from their homes. Aboer Stoltzfus worked as a roofer, Mr. Pyfer said, and met Pagan members on his work trips outside L'ancaster.

The two men were indicted Tuesday oo charges of participating in a conspiracy to distribute more than $1 million worth of cocaine and methamphetamine. Federal prosecutors placed most of the blame on eight members of the motorcycle gang, who were described as reckless and violent.

Emory Edward Reed, president of the Pagans' Chester County chapter, broke one of the defendant's legs with an ax handle when he refused an order and knocked out teeth of the other defendant when he failed to pay on time.

Members of the biker gang were known as habitual law-breakers. But no one from the Amish had ever been involved in such serious criminal activity, attorneys said.

The two men on trial allegedly bought the drugs from gang members between 1992 and 1997 and distributed them at parties of youth groups known as the Antiques, the Crickets and the Pilgrims. A jovenile identified only as CS also participated in the conspiracy, according to prosecutors, but was not charged in the indictment.

During the five years the two men were distributing cocaine, according to the charges, they were participating in an Amish rite of passage for males 16 to 24, translated loosely into English as "sowing your wild oats," Mr. Pyfer said.

Clinton Plans Slashed

WASHINGTON — Setting Congress on a collision course with President Bill Clinton, a House panel has approved a proposal to slash the president's education initiatives as well as the annual financing for home-heating subsidies for poor people.

The proposal provides substantial in-creases for the National Institutes of Health and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, underscoring the Republicans' emphasis on popular health and research programs.

At the same time, it takes a $2.6 billion bite out of administration priorities, cutting the Goals 2000 education program in half, eliminating the Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program, terminating the Summer Youth jobs program and decreasing money to tutor disadvantaged children.

Mr. Clinton called the cuts "arbitrary" and "extreme."

Secret U.S. Technology Disappeared During Crash of Chinese Rocket into whether sensitive space technology was transferred to China by American aerospace and it was for their own safety. When the Washinstersee.

WASHINGTON - A secret encoded circuit board containing sensitive technology was missing from the wreckage of an American satellite aboard a Chinese rocket that exploded in 1996, and American officials say they suspect that Chinese authorities took the board The disclosure of the missing circuit board, which tells an orbiting satellite which way to point to receive and transmit signals to and from Earth, was made Tuesday at an unusual joint hearing of two House committees, National Security and International Relations.

If China did steal the circuit board, it would be a violation of a technology safeguards agreement that Beijing and Washington last amended in 1993, to prevent the transfer of sensitive American military technology.

In raising that possibility, the new disclosure opened a new front in the congressional inquiry

Representative Curt Weldon, Republican of Pennsylvania, said the circuit board would be a focus of a special committee the House created last week to investigate the wide-ranging China accusations. The control box containing the circuit board was recovered at the crash site, he said, "but the card is gone. We better call the Chinese on this issue. That is a very serious concern."

On Feb. 15, 1996, U.S. military monitors watched the Chinese rocket launch from a command post in southern China as it streaked toward space carrying a $200 million American communications satellite. But 22 seconds after liftoff, the Long March rocket exploded, showering debris and burning fuel on a nearby Chinese village, where by U.S. accounts as many as 200 civilians were killed.

For five hours, American officials said, Chinese authorities barred them from the crash site, saying secret encoded circuit board was missing. Now congressional investigators are asking whether there could be any explanation for the missing technology other than that the Chinese took it.

At Toesday's hearing, Mr. Weldon quoted a statement he said was given to him by the National Security Agency that warned: "If the encryption board were reversed-engineered, the knowledge gained could be used to strengthen adversaries' knowledge" of the devices the United States uses to safeguard its communications systems.

A senior Defense Department official said Tuesday that he was not aware that the govemment had demanded that the Chinese account for the missing encoded card. "We're not 100 percent sure they filched this encryption card," the official said. "It may have just fallen out, but we have to assume they do have it."

At the hearing, Congress also disclosed that second inquiry is centered on the possible sharing of sensitive information with the Chinese without American government supervision.

The new revelation also adds a new dynamic to an ongoing Justice Department inquiry into the matter. Federal investigators are trying to determine if the two satellite-makers, Loral Space & Communications and Hughes Electronics, divulged sensitive technology to Chinese rocket scientists during an analysis of the failed launch.

The State Department oversees exports of the encoded boards as militarily sensitive technology. But when the same components are embedded in a satellite, the whole unit falls under the export controls of the Commerce Department. A government auditor told a Senate inquiry earlier this month that the Commerce rules are looser than the State rules.

Government officials insist that American against sensitive technology being released in accidents like the February 1996 explosion.

William Reinsch, an undersecretary of commerce for export administration, told a House hearing last Thursday that there "there would not have been any effect on national security" if China obtained the encoded device. But the Defense Department said in a statement provided to Mr. Weldon that the "loss of the thips" would actually have a "minimal impact. - not no impact at all - on national security.

In addition, according to Mr. Weldon, the National Security Agency, the government's code makers and code breakers, said that it had changed the encoded algorithms in satellite circuit boards after the failed February 1996 launch.

"If there was only 'minimal impact' to nay tional security, why did the NSA change the algorithms?" Mr. Weldon asked Tuesday.

Habibe Agrees To Cut Forces In East Timor, Bishop Reports

JAKARTA — A prominent Indooe-sian dissident and Nobel laureate said Wednesday that President B. J. Habibic had pledged to withdraw some troops from disputed East Timor and allow its people greater freedom.

But after meeting with Mr. Habibie at the presidential palace, Bishop Carlos Ximenes Belo said that he and Indonesia's new leader had skirted a key issoe: the demand of many East Timorese for a vote on independence for the Indonesian-controlled territory.

"He supports how to improve first the internal situation," Bishop Belo said after the meeting. As for a vote on independence, the bishop added: "Maybe it will come later.

Mr. Habibie has ruled out a referendum in the former Portuguese colony, which was invaded by Indonesia in 1975 and annexed the next year. Instead, he has offered special status that would grant an undefined measure of antonomy while keeping East Timor as Indonesia's 27th province. Still, Mr. Habibie's decision to meet with Bishop Belo was a sign of new government openness.

"He's ready, through his government, to improve the situation in East Timor," said the bishop, who shared the 1996 Nobel Peace Prize with another East Timorese activist, Jose Ramos-Horta. "Many suggestions that I prescured, he supported them fully."

Bishop Belo's proposals included a reduction of Indonesia's heavy military presence in East Timor and greater free dom of movement for East Timor's 800,000 people. He said that Mr. Habible had agreed on these points. Mr. Habibie's office did not com-meet uo the meeting. Meanwhile, hundreds of heavily armed soldiers blocked about 300 workers from staging an anti-government protest at Parliament on Wednesday.

The army stopped a fleet of buses chartered to carry demonstrators from the offices of the Indonesian Prosperity Trade Union to the legislature. Troops also barred workers from reaching the offices. There were no injuries or arrests.

South Koreans Try to Raise Submarine

President Says Incident Should Not Change Approaches to the North

The Associated Press

DONGHAE, South Korea - With warships circling, South Korean Navy frogmen attached air bags to a sunken North Korean submarine Wednesday, hoping to raise it and look inside for spies or clues to its mission.

The small submarine broke loose from a towline Tuesday while a South Korean frigate was pulling it to the Donghae naval base. It sank in 30 meters (100 feet) of water a kilometer off the coast.

A Defense Ministry spokesman, Lieutenant Colonel Kim Chong Sook, said the submarine would not be raised before Thursday afternooo because rapid currents had delayed the divers. He said he did oot expect any crewmen to be alive. President Kim Dae Jung, fearing the incident might derail his fragile efforts to cotice the North to open up its society, has ordered the Defense Ministry to refrain from retaliatory-thetoric. Earlier, ministry officials speculated the crew managed to escape before their vessel was seized Monday while entangled in a mackerel fishing net just south of the North Korean border. Navy divers got no response when they pounded on the sub's hull with a hammer. They also used sonar scans but detected no signs of life inside. North Korea said Tuesday that one of its submarines was missing on a training mission after experiencing mechanical problems. But the South suspects the Submarine was on a spy mission.

On Wednesday, the South Korean president visited an air base and an army command post east of Scoul in an apparent effort to counter criticism from some domestic news media that he was three faces in its dealings with us," Mr. Kim told officers.

"But our principles should not be shaken," be added, reaffirming his policy of prying open the North through economic and diplomatic efforts that include humanitarian aid.

We will not tolerate an armed provocation," Mr. Kim told the airmen. But we have to wait and see if the submarine was drifting, as the North says, or it was spying on us. Then we will act."

Anthorities described the submarine as a "midget submersible," which can carry a crew of six and is used primarily to transport spies and conduct coastal surveillance.

The submarine was found not far from where a larger North Korean sub ran aground two years ago. The 1996 incursion triggered a 53-day manhunt being too soft on North Korea incursion triggered a 53 "North Korea is revealing two or that left 37 people dead.

Pakistan and India Will Talk in July

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan: --Pakistan said Wednesday that Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif had agreed to hold bilateral talks with his Indian counterpart, Atal Behari Vajpayce, during a South Asian summit meeting in Sri Lanka beginning July 29.

Mr. Vajpayee proposed the talks in a letter that New Delhi said was written to Mr. Sharif on June 14, amid high tension between the two sides over their nuclear tests last month.

A Pakistan Foreign Ministry statement said Mr. Sharif sent a letter to Mr. Vajpayee on Tuesday, hoping the two leaders would hold the talks during the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation meeting. Mr. Sharif also expressed the hope that the two sides would discuss "all issues of concern, particularly issues of peace and security in the nuclearized South Asia" and their dispute over the Himalayan region of Jammu and Kashmir.

Afghanistan Rejects Israeli Quake Aid

JERUSALEM - Afghanistan has rejected an Israeli shipment of humanitarian aid for survivors of an earthquake in May that killed from 3,000 to 5,000 people, a Red Cross official said Wednesday.

A spokesman for the Red Cross in Jerusalem, David Lynch, said the Afghan authorities had refused to allow 15 tons of Israeli aid across the border from Tajikistan.

There was an objection on the part of the embassy of the Islamic state of Afghanistan" in Tajikistan, Mr. Lynch said. "They said they never asked for any humanitarian aid from Israel.

Israel sent the shipment of blankets and tents by helicopter via Tajikistan in early June after saying Afghanistan, which has no ties with Israel, had approved the aid.
"This stuff arrived, and then they withdrew their commission," Mr. Lynch said. "We can only suppose that it is for political reasons."

Mr. Lynch said Red Cross authorities - were - negotiating with . the Afghan government to allow the ship-(Reuters)

Malaysia Deports 438 Indonesians

KUALA LUMPUR — Malaysia deported 438 illegal Indonesian workers on Wednesday in two crammed ferries that sailed from the southern port of Malacca, the national press agency Bernama reported.

The Indonesians — 320 men, 97 women and 21 children - were: rounded up in a nationwide crackdown on illegal workers.

Malaysia has deported more than 30,000 Indonesians since the Asian economic crisis worsened this year. It says it expects to deport 200,000 illegal Indonesian immigrants by Aug. 15

The last big deportation was on May 13, when 900 Indonesians were sent home in wooden trawlers. (AP)

Opposition Doubt On Cambodia Vote

PHNOM PENH - An opposition politician, Sam Rainsy, said Wednesday that the international community was willing to let democracy in Cambodia die in its rush to wash its '. hands of the country and turn its attention to other trouble spots.

Over the weekend, Cambodia's main aid donors and Asian neighbors dersed preparations for Cambodia's election on July 26 despite threats. from Mr. Sam Rainsy, a former finance minister, and another opposition party leader to boycott the vote if was not postponed and made fairer.

Mr. Sam Rainsy, a popular and outspoken critic of Hun Sen's government, said he would decide on July 5 whether he would take part in the election or not.

"Most of the countries who call themselves friends of Cambodia have already made up their minds," he said, They have already decided to endorse the election on July 26, and they turn a blind eye to many shortcomings and many irregularities because they want to wash their hands of Cambodia quickly. They have other concerns in other parts of the world." The international community sponsored a 1991 peace treaty that officially ended the Cambodian war and then spent some $2 billion on a two-year peace process and an elec-tion in 1993 run by the United Nations.

■ Blueprint for an Infrastructure Upgrade

The European Commission unveiled a $110 billion blneprint Wednesday to upgrade roads, railways, air and seaports in the East European countries that have asked to join the EU. The Associated Press reported from Brussels.

The EU transport commissioner, Neil Kinnock, said that the bulk of the cost of 100 billion European Currency Units must be borne by the candidates.

He estimated that it would cost them 1.5 percent of their annual gross domestic product between now and 2015 to realize the ambitious plan. It is designed to build or upgrade 18,000 kilometers (11,100 miles) of roads, 20,290 kilometers of rail line, 38 airports and 13 ports on seas and 14 on rivers. The projects covers the countries - Poland, Hungary, the Czech Republic, Slovenia, Estonia, Lithuania, Latvia, Slovakia, Romania and Bulgaria—that expect to join the EU in the next decade.

In recent years, the EU has provided them with 1 billion European Currency Units ($1.1 billion) in infrastructure aid. Mr. Rinnock said that between now and 2000, the figure will go to 500 million ecns a year, but be made it clear "the applicant countries will have to shoulder the major share of the coming in Friday, but may not cost of developing the network while coping with intense pressures on their public finances."

Austrian Church Rift Puts Cardinal in Spotlight

By Alessandra Stanley

New York Times Service

VIENNA — It is impolitic for Roman Catholics to speculate too openly about who could be the successor to Pope John Paul II.

Bnt as the 78-year-old Pope's health declines, Vatican watchers cannot resist studying the roster of cardinals for the one who could be chosen from among a few.

One of the names frequently mentioned is that of Cardinal Christoph Schoenborn, the 53-year-old leader of the deeply divided Austrian Catholic Church.

The rift drove the Pope to travel to Austria on a pastoral mission, his third visit to Austria. While the Pope set about trying to deal with the problems of the Austrian flock, his three-day visit gave his Vatican entourage — and the Vatican press corps - a closer look at the man directly in charge of solving the problems. Cardinal Schoenborn, like the Pope, is a staunch conservative on doctrinal matters. But he has handled a deep scandal with deft diplomacy.

During a news conference on Friday, the cardinal effortlessly charmed an often cynical press corps from Rome by calmly answering questions, in four languages, about the battles within the church. (He speaks six languages.)

Asked to give his own views on one issue bedeviling Austrian Catholics — whether laymen should be allowed to say Mass - the Cardinal launched into an extended metaphor, borrowed from Saint Paul, about how believers are parts of the same body, equally important hut not inter-for the period of the Pope's visit. He preaches the need for dialogue, but be is not seen as someone who supports the growing movement for democratization. "He is a very friendly man who listens to the people," said Panl Weitzer, a member of a dissident lay group. "But he moves not a millimeter from his theological point." Cardinal Schoenborn is a former theology professor who comes from a wealthy noble family.

NATO officials said the planning covered a range of possible options. from large-scale air strikes against Serbian air defense and other strategic sites across Yugoslavia, through moving peacekeeping troops or monitors onto the border betweeo Albania and Kosovo, down to simply having another air power demonstration like the one staged over Macedonian territory last week to try to intimidate Serbian commanders.

Serbian forces have apparently sealed off much of the Albanian border, NATO officials said, adding that only a dozen refugees from Kosovo a day had been seen moving across, compared to hundreds a day earlier this mooth.

France, which has backed the military planning, pressed for as wide a range of options as possible and resisted urging hy NATO military anthorities for a quick, heavy series of air strikes as the only threat that would impress the Serbs. French officials said.

Whether France would actually agree to NATO strikes if Serbia remained adamant and Russia continued to oppose a mandate was another question, according to French officials.

Over an eight-day period, with stealth and stamina that would make a military commander proud under different circumstances, Mr. Dedai and 13 other members of the 42-man Albanian platooo slipped away from their American bosts.

They were trying, U.S. and Albanian officials believe, to desert the economic and social chaos enveloping Albania, one of central Europe's poorest

The men then called the K-Town Taxi service and agreed to pay $600 for a limousine to take them more than 360 miles (580 kilometers) north to the home of a cousin in Philadelphia.

Five days later, a looe Albanian soldier left the barracks under the cover of darkness. He has not been heard from since.

The next night three others left and began a 55-mile trek to Kinston. They made it to the bus station where, on June 19, a police captain, Mike Perry, happened to drive by looking for building code violations, "They just didn't look like they fit in," said Mr.

That same day, the cab driver, who had read about his three customers' disappearance, called the police with their Philadelphia address and the immigration service apprehended them.

U.S. military officials say it is rare for foreign troops to try to desert while attending exercises in the United States. But this is not the first time Albanian soldiers have fled. Clinton Vetoes Russia-Iran Missile Sanctions

By Thomas W. Lippman Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON -- President Bill Clinton has vetoed a bill passed by overwhelming margins in both houses of Congress to impose sanctions oo companies in Russia that sell ballistic missile equipment or technology to Iran.

The administration has long opposed Russian as-sistance to Iran's missile development program. But Mr. Clintoo said the sanctions are unacceptable.

He said the hill, which would target Russian companies, would 'make it more difficult' to work cooperatively with Russia on a range of security issues. including missile proliferation, law enforcement, narconcs and crime.

He also said the bill would add to the proliferation of sanctions, now touching more than 70 nations, while the administration is looking for ways to restrain their use.

"Adding yet another flawed sanctions bill is not the way to start," Mr. Clinton said in a veto message Tuesday. "Existing law provides a sufficient hasis for imposing sanctions when we need them."

Michael McCurry, White House press secretary, and other officials also said that a focus on Iran would run counter to the strategy unveiled last week by Secretary of State Madeleine Albright of reaching out to Iran's relatively moderate president, Mohammed Khatami, in the hope of restoring normal relations.

The measure also coordined legislation to implement the Chemical Weapons Convention, a treaty banning poison gas weapons that was ratified by the Senate last year after a strenuous lobbying effort by the Clinton administration. Congress attached the chemical weapons measure to the sanctions hill in hopes of persuading Mr. Clinton to accept the cotire package.

Without the implementing legislation, the United States is technically violating a treaty the administration strongly supported. But Mr. Clinton's objections to the Russia-Iran sanctions overrode the administration's desire to see the chemical weapons measure enacted into law, administration officials said.

Mr. McCurry announced the president's intention to veto the hill shortly after a group of House Democrats — led by the bill's sponsor, Representative Howard Berman of California — held a news conference at the Capitol urging Mr. Clintoo not to do so. Mr. Berman and his colleagues predicted that Congress would override the veto.

In a gesture to the administration, Congress wrote the sanctions bill to apply only to missile or technology sales after Jan. 22 of this year. On that day, Russia adopted arms export regulations hailed by Washington as the legal tool that would enable Russia to curb exports by privately owned Russian companies.

But the president said he decided to veto the hill because it "does not allow flexibility sufficient to reflect the progress made by the Russian government in formulating policies and processes whose goal is to sever links between Russian entities and Iran's ballistic missile program.''

The sanctions would have little real effect on either Russia or Iran. They would cut off for two years any U.S. exports of military equipment or weapons-usable technology to a handful of Russian companies and would prohibit U.S. loans to them.

Nerve Gas Find Toughens U.S. Stance on Embargo

"It's a nail in the coffin for Iraq's efforts to lift sanctions and to show substantial progress on disarmament,' the chief U.S. delegate, Bill Richardson said Tuesday in an ioterview.

Britain's chief delegate, Sir John Weston, said there was no room to give Iraq the benefit of the doubt about the existence of "extremely potent chemical weapons" like VX. "I think it ill serves the United Nations not to look the facts in the face and to deal with them squarely in a case of this kind," he said. The United States and Britain have fought against relaxing the sanctions, which were imposed after Iraq invaded Kuwait in 1990, until weapons inspec-mass destruction and the means to make The three other permanent members of the Security Council - China, France and Russia — have supported a more accommodating approach that takes into account the limited cooperation Iraq has offered so far. The oil sanctions have already been relaxed to allow Iraq to earn money for food and medicine imports.

But the discovery of VX on missile warhead fragments, first reported Tuesday by The Washingtoo Post, has sounded alarms because it offers proof that the Iraqis lied when they called their VX program purely experimental. Experts say that if the Iraqis could stabilize VX sufficiently to pour it into warheads, they could also keep it stable enough to hide for years from inspectors. President Bill Clinton left little doubt that the United States would use the discovery to keep the sanctions on Iraqi oil, "Let the inspections go forward and don't lift the sanctions until the resolutions are complied with," he said

Iraq, in a statement by its UN mission, said the Aberdeen analysis of warheads could not be correct because "continuous productioo failure" had prevented the use of VX in any munitions.

The Iraqi statement also sought to find fault with the handling of the VX samples, saying Baghdad was told that only one of the seven samples analyzed had shown variable traces of VX. It also said that the samples were taken without giving Iraq equivalent samples, as had been agreed upon, and that no soil samples were takeo for comparisoo. The statement also noted that Iraq had insisted that any analysis of importance be done in a neutral country or be divided among laboratories of other countries. The Security Couocil was being briefed on the issue Wednesday hy Richard Butler, the Australian diplomat who heads the arms inspection team.

Redrawing Jerusalem

Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu has chosen an awkward moment to redraw the boundaries of Jerusalem, one of the most sensitive issues in the Mideast peace talks. The point of those talks is to resolve disputed issues by negotiation and compromise, not by one side's acting on its own.

At Mr. Netanyahn's behest, Washington has been trying to find a formula to move the peace talks forward to the toughest remaining issues. These include boundaries within greater Jerusalem, the future of Jewish settlements and the political status of Palestiniancontrolled areas.

Mr. Netanyahu says he still wants such accelerated talks. Bot if he means to negotiate in good faith, he should out now be redrawing the pobtical boundaries of greater Jerusalem.

The new boundaries would expand Jerusalem's territory by 50 percent, by annexing Israeli land to the west. Although only Israeli territory is involved, Mr. Netanyaho should not be redefining Jerusalem's borders in advance of negotiations about its future.

More provocatively, the expansion plan also contemplates including several West Bank settlements east and north of the city in an "umbrella municipality," with Jerusalem responsi-ble for their public services.

The political status of these and other Jewish settlements should also be resolved at the negotiating table. Although they may end up under Israeli sovereignty, that should come about as part of a broader package, perhaps in exchange for Israeli compromises on other issues

The plan's actual bearing on the peace talks will largely depend on details still to be worked out. In response to strong criticism from Washington, Mr. Netanyahu seems to have retreated a bit, reassuring the Clinton administration that no decision has yet been made to extend Jerusalem's municipal anthority farther into the West Bank. That clarification is more constructive than his earlier boast that the new arrangements were "a basic change in Jerusalem's status, which will be remembered as a turning point."

But past experience, including the opening of a controversial tourist tunnel two years ago and the approval of oew Jewish housing in East Jerusalem last year, should have taught Prime Minister Netanyahu that any abrupt changes in the city's delicate status quo, particularly in the absence of negotiating progress with the Palestinians, can be explosive.

Mr. Netanyahu faces increasingly sharp divisions within his own cabinet over whether to take the next steps toward peace. By causing new tensioo over Jerusalem, he may be trying to change the subject. If so, be can expect only a temporary respite. Most Israelis believe in a negotiated peace with the Palestinians, and reasonably expect their government to move ahead to-

Junk the E-Mail Junk

Sending a single e-mail is easy and cheap; sending a million e-mails is just as easy and cheap, and that makes it nearly irresistible as a form of mass marketing. Anyone with e-mail has by u now experienced the effects of this anomaly. People with ordinary accounts get used to deleting a stack of fly-bynight solicitations from their e-mail inboxes every morning. Parents whose children's accounts are flooded tend to react with less equanimity, especially since much of the trash advertises Xrated services or elaborate scams.

Is "sparn," as junk e-mail is known. just a price you pay for using the In-ternet, or is it a hazard demanding government action? After kicking around the question for several years, the Senate now has passed the first stah at a law to curb the problem, an amendment sponsored by Frank Murkowski, Republican of Alaska, and Robert Torricelli, Democrat of New Jerrsey, and appended to a larger hill about telephone marketing practices. Senator Murkowski is well situated to find junk e-mail a menace, since his Alaska constituents mostly have to phone long distance to pick up their e-mail. One argument for classifying junk epays. A competing bill would simply extend the law against junk faxes (which makes it illegal to send unsolicited mass faxes) to cover e-mail as well. But it has been stalled over problems of labeling and classifying unsolicited commercial, as opposed to, say, political, bulk mail, The more general argument for regulating spam is that it adds to Internet costs and slows down service across the board. Much of it is fraudulent for instance, promising to remove the recipient's name from future mailings if requested, but then using the return request as a way of verifying that the email address really works (and pelting it all the more regularly). Mr. Murkowski's bill focuses mainly on this facet of the problem. It would require all unsolicited commercial e-mail to have a valid return address and to honor removal requests.

Although much scaled back from an earlier version that required Internet service providers to filter such bulk email, this version of the bill has nonetheless drawn complaints. Some supporters of the competing bill say this approach will not really stop spam, while others say it, too, fails to define "junk" bulk commercial mail carefully enough and could interfere with individuals' well-established free mail differently from ordinary junk speech right to send messages anon-mail is that, as with faxes, the recipient ymously. If that can be fixed, though, taking a small, cautious step such as this one is probably the right way to go. -THE WASHINGTON POST.

Warm reports about Prince Charles have begun to blossom on both sides of the Atlantic. Some — little green fingerlings of fact, like his contribution of a watercolor be painted of Hong Kong harbor in an auction this week at the New York Academy of Art — gently suggest a creative spirit, a charitable heart. But there are big flattering images of princely purpose ripening into color, too.

The New York Times (1HT. June 18) noted the favorable reviews for his creation of Poundbury, a new town being built on his land. Praise has welled up in British publications as different as the Financial Times and Homes and Antiques magazine. Suddenly the man once satirized as the dotty "Prince of Sorrows" is being celebrated for integrity, modesty and good taste. Town and Country put Prince Charles on its cover, smiling gently in his garden.

Such a shift in image can sometimes be the result of artful public relations work, a careful mulching and watering of the media. The British press, chastened by the criticism of its pursuit of Diana, the late princess of Wales, has been in a mood to be receptive. The image of England's remote, expensive, undisciplined royal clan was in dire need of freshening.

There were also issues of personal character. When Diana's traumatic death brought the monarchy's cold ineptitude into such sharp relief, the perception of the prince had been crumbling, piece by piece, through almost two decades of marital scandal and disintegration. She had become an icon of glamour, motherhood and good deeds. His public persona had been reduced to that of an eccentric blun-derer: unrequited in love and work, ineffectual in fetherhood modific ineffectual in fatherhood, moodily puttering in his garden.

Now, as ber presence fades and a collection of her ball gowns goes on paid exhibition at the oew Ronald Reagan Building in Washington, Prince Charles is beginning to enjoy a dif-ferent kind of reputation. With his enduring lover, Camilla Parker Bowles, somewhere out of sight, and the prince more often in view in the company of his sons, there seems to be a welling public regard for him.

He is seen as a protective father, an imovative manager of his estates, a thoughtful man, a modest, candid future king. In the warmth of this summer, as his 50th birthday nears this fall, it seems the prince and his country are starting to graft. After such a long period of grow-ing apart, it is a startling sight. — THE NEW YORK TIMES.

manipulate each other's political affairs. The Chinese expect to exploit the Clinton visit to cover over their policies of internal repression and obtain implicit endorsement of their ambition to become the dominant power in Asia.

They will see in the visit validation of their recent discovery that the way to deal with America is not through the State Department or the White House, hot by directly or indirectly financing political parties and election campaigns, and by persuading corporations doing business in China to lobby on China's behalf in Washington.

The administration and most of the American policy community believe that the link to America is so important to China's leadership that those leaders will shape their own policies to preserve or strengthen the link. Washington, and business, have also convinced themselves that democracy and markets will in any case dominate China's future, producing steadily improved relations with America. This faith in inevitable progress rationalizes the administration's policy of compromising on political and buman rights issues so as to promote China's market opening to American manufactures, agricultural exports and services.

By William Pfaff

If democracy does not in the end prove part of the package, Washington will be sorry but will make the best of it. It has already apparently decided to make the best of China's avowed 'technical'' inability to broadcast Mr. Clinton's speeches live, which would mean tolerating censorship of the president's statements to the Chinese television and radio andiences. Washington has a simple, dominating objective: open markets. This follows from the overpoweringly seductive prospect, or fantasy, of more than a billion Chinese consumers of American exports. American enthusiasm was evident in the air flotilla that conveyed more than a thousand officials. journalists and businessmen guests of the president to the Chinese capital, and

China's objective is to obtain implicit U.S. endorsement as Asia's leading power — at Japanese, Indian and Russian expense.

There is nothing sinister about this. Primacy in Asia is a normal ambition for the Chinese leaders, imposed by China's history and national self-conception since antiquity. As for the United States, its business is business. as Calvin Coolidge bleakly remarked.

cratic practices or a market economy. Its resistance to globalization and the international marketplace is why its economy and currency were spared the worst consequences of the Asian crash of the past six months - and why, last week, China could maneuver Treasury Secretary Robert Rubin into supporting the sinking Japanese yen and thereby protecting, for the moment, the competitiveness of Chinese exports.

China's actual future is quite unforeseeable. The government headed by Jiang Zemin is a Communist Party oligarchy, at a time when communism has lost all serious meaning in China. Its legitimacy is no longer ideological or revolutionary. It rests on the fact that so far it has kept order in the country, presiding over an economic boom while containing the negative con-sequences of that boom.

That the regime can go on doing this is open to serious doubt. Even if it succeeds, it is even more doubtful that this will really be enough to assure a successful future for China.

A recent newspaper report quoted an American academic as saying that President Jiang Zemin is staking his reputation in Chinese history on success in establishing a strong and lasting relationship with the United States. This may be how it looks in Washington,

China, historically, has considered itself the "middle Kingdom," to which others are tributary. China's future de-pends on what the Chinese themselves do to re-establish not only their political nation but their civilization as one central to the human experience, which is what it was in the past. Mr. Jiang's place in Chinese history will depend on that.

G. F. Hudson, in his classic history of China's relations with Europe. quotes a proverb from the 16th century which says that the Chinese alone possess two eyes. The Franks (the Westerners) possess one eye. All the other inhabitants of the earth are blind.

Two intersecting views cross one another in China today.

There is Mr. Clinton's, confident of global preeminence yet anxious, for domestic reasons, for China's trade and favor — and therefore, in a measure, in the position of suppliant.

There is the view of the Chinese. seeing in their dealings with Washington a step toward recovery of their own preemmence, lost since the Manchu decline began two centuries ago. Whose is the two-eyed view?

China has contributed positively to easing the Asian financial crisis. It has taken risks and paid a price. This is manifested in China's adherence to the policy of not devaluing, and its provision of assistance totaling more than $4 billion for Indonesia, the Republic of Korea and Thailand.

By Jiang Zemin Mr. Jiang is president of China.

So there ought to be a commoo standard that it is inadvisable to commend the efforts of one country for maintaining the value of its currency [while] giving tacit approval to another country which devalues its currency. I have seen some developments in this regard and find it hard to understand.

Bad Times for Cops in Kosovo

Until recently, being a Ser-bian policeman was relatively attractive, and being sent to Kosovo was also lucrative, if slightly boring: room and board, high per diems, a special premium for nonfamily posting. There was an occasional stone thrown by an ethnic Albanian, but cops from Serbia run the show "down there."

Since 1996, wheo the Kosovo Liberation Army started attacking "stooges of the op-pressor regime," the job is not so boring anymore. This year there were more than 400 attacks, of which 149 were against Serbian police. Eight-een police officers were killed; others live in constant

In the heat of the front-line reports, this phenomenon has received little attention. Serbia is a surreal place in its own right, but that policemen would be the first Serbs to rebel against Mr. Milosevic may indicate that the police ranks have not closed behind

The Poor Are Unwanted In the 'Secessionist Age'

By George F. Will

powerful nation visits the world's most populous astion, note that the future is being defined by disintegrative forces, worldwide.

In Europe in 1500 there were approximately 500 political entities. By the beginning of the 19th century there were a few dozen. The unifications of Italy and Germany further reduced the number. By 1920 Europe had 23 states with 18,000 kilometers (11,200 miles) of borders. But by 1994 it had 50 states and 40,000 kilometers of borders. In the four decades after 1945, United Nations membership tripled.

These figures lead Pascal
Boniface, a French scholar, to say we live in "the secessionist age, in which secession — Kosovo is just the instance du jour - is the principal threat to peace.

Writing on "The Proliferation of States" in The Washington Quarterly, Mr. Boniface argues that whereas war used to be the hammer that pounded nations together, now war often is an instrument for dismantlement.

The disintegration of the Soviet Union and Yugoslavia, and Slovakia's divorce from the Czech Republic, exemplify various forms of contemporary fissuring. Mr. Boniface sees the potential for further fracturing of nations almost everywhere, from Yemen to Iraq.

In Indonesia, some of the 180 million people from 500 tribal groups spread over 18,000 islands are apt to aspire to constitute the next Hong Kong or Singapore a small, independent economic. prodigy. Indian Sikhs on the border with Pakistan seek an independent Khalistan. There is Gurkha secessionism in the Himalayan foothills and Islamic separatism in Kashmir. Much splintering is ascribed to the recrudescence, in the post-Cold War thaw, of religious and ethnic impulses. Marx and others wrongly argued that such impulses were preindustrial forces that lost their salience and were supplanted by economic motives in the industrial era. But if Mr. Boniface is right, it may be time to revive respect for economic interpretations of historic changes.

. He argues that one reason for the proliferation of nations is the pursuit of prosperity through WASHINGTON — As the miniaturization. "Prosperity has president of the world's most dethroned power as the primary concern of states." So "when a cultural or ethnic group decides that it is the principal generator of wealth in a larger nation or federation, a secessionist movement is just a press release away."

As "the arms race has given way to a prosperity race," the Northern League has risen in Italy to express resentment of unity with the backward south, Mexico's north resents the south. In Spain, regional nationalism is strongest in the Basque and Catalan regions, the two wealth-iest. South Korea's ardor for reunification of the peninsula has cooled since Germany has counted the costs of its reunification.

hood was halting, in part because of economic rivalries among regions. In his new book, "A History of the American People," Paul Johnson notes that the word "nation," which some Southerners found objectionable, does not appear in the Declaration of Independence or the Constitution, and even Chief Justice John Marshall, the supreme nationalizer, used the world gingerly: "America has chosen to be, in many respects and for many purposes, a nation."

America's march to true nation-

It took roads - and canals, railroads, the postal service, and especially the New Deal's redistribution of wealth toward the South — to provide the economic prerequisite of national unity.

Which China should note, given the huge and growing dispar-ities between its booming coastal and lagging interior regions. 'What makes China susceptible to fracturing is economic diver-sification," Mr. Boniface writes, "The rich in China are no more likely to want to support the poor than the rich anywhere else.

Mr. Boniface believes that the era of territorial acquisition by conquest has been followed by an era of territorial "unloading" "a rusb to become smaller in the hope of being able to pass through the eye of the needle leading to-ward greater wealth." In light of the worldwide waxing of centrifugal forces, America's unique combination of vast size and equitably distributed prosperity makes American preeminence seem even more likely to be prolonged. .The Washington Post.

Willem van Eekelen's plea for an independent Kosovo (Letters, June 19) beautifully demonstrates the double standards and moral bankruptcy of the Western governments and the media that unquestioningly parrot their prejudices. When Yngoslavia started to

Yet far from supporting their right to autonomy, especially in light of the appalling atrocities the Krajina Serbs had suffered in World War II. Western organizations and politicians demanded they stay in Croatia, referred to them as "fascists" and actively assisted in their even-

A CIA Story of Two Men Who Came Through It

By Donald P. Gregg

New YORK — At dawn on Nov. 29, 1952, an unmarked CIA transport plane clawed its way into a gray and hostile sky. Taking off from a base in South Korea, the aircraft was on a mission to drop supplies to a team of Chinese agents in Mancburia who had radioed for help, saying that they had lost most of their food when they had been parachuted into hostile territory a few days earlier.

Aboard the rescue plane were Jack Downey and Dick Fecteau.

MEANWHILE

They were helping to run a CIA agent-infiltration program, designed to report on the flow of Chinese Communist men and material into the Korean Peninsula, where furious fighting still raged along what later be-came the Demilitarized Zone.

The mission was doomed from the outset. The agent team had been captured by the Chinese and forced to send the SOS message. The drop zone was ringed by Chinese antiaircraft guns, and the plane was quickly shot down. The American pilots were killed, but Mr. Downey and Mr. Fecteau survived the crash, to be tried and convicted by the Chinese for espionage.

Mr. Downey, judged by the Chinese to be the senior survivor, was seutenced to life imprisoument. He was 22 years old, 18 months out of Yale. Mr. Fecteau received a 20-year sentence.

I knew Mr. Downey well, having gone through a six-month paramilitary training program with him. He was one of the most popular and respected members of our 40-man group, Another CIA colleague and I had dinner with him the night before his ill-fated mission. We both remember his excitement and enthusiasm about what lay ahead. For the next 20 years, I thought often of Mr. Downey and Mr. Fecteau, trapped like flies in amher,

The U.S. dialogue with China was extremely limited in those days, even after an armistice agree-ment in Korea. Periodic meetings in Warsaw were the only chance for direct contacts with Chinese officials. Mr. Downey and Mr. Fecteau were always on the agenda, but remained in captivity. Mr. Fecteau eventually was set 20-year sentence. Finally, in March 1973, Mr. Downey was released by Beijing. This followed President Richard Nixon's 1972 visit to China and an American admission that Mr. Downey had been on a CIA operation when he was shot down. He had served 20 years and four months in prison.

Mr. Downey had kept himself in strong physical and mental shape. Walking to freedom in Hong Kong, he was asked how he felt the is reported to have said that he had noticed women's skirts were shorter than when he had been captured. He credited his reading of Sports Illustrated with keeping him basically abreast of world developments.

He wasted no time in putting his life back together. He was admitted to Harvard Law School in 1973. He married a Chinese textile designer studying in America, and they have a son.

In 1983, on the 10th anniversary of his release, Mr. Downey and his family were invited back to China by Beijing, a measure of the respect the Chinese bad developed for the man they held captive for more than two decades. He speaks positively of the trip. Mr. Downey has served for many years as a judge of the Superior Court in Connecticut. He remains rather laconic about his incarceration, saying that it taught him patience and that it gives him added sympathy for those he has to sentence to prisou. In his quiet way, he serves as an inspiration to his friends and CIA comrades. Mr. Fecteau's is also an admirable story. He went on to became assistant director of athletics at Boston University.

In this era of celebrity worship and instant self-gratification, Mr. Downey's life is a shining example of how to deal gracefully with unexpected tragedies that fare may bold in store for us. On Thursday, the CIA will honor Mr. Downey and Mr. Fecteau at a ceremony at its Virginia headquarters.

Their resilience, courage and integrity are virtues the CIA should seek to reclaim for itself.

LANCE LEAD AGE.

GOODBYE : By Dale Peck. 458 pages. $25.

Farrar, Straus & Giroux. , Reviewed by Michiko Kakutani

Pale PECK'S harrowing new nov-el, "Now It's Time to Say Goodbye," is that rare thing: an utterly grip-ping thriller — crammed full of . suspense, Gothic borror and often startling violence - and a highly sophisticated piece of literary legerdemain.
This dark, ferocious book reads like

"Twin Peaks" and "Pulp Fiction" - combined with "Days of Heaven" and "To Kill a Mockingbird," with bits of Faulkner, Carson McCullers and Flannery O'Connor thrown in for good mea-¿ sure. It also stands as a thoroughly original and persuasive work of art, this : immensely talented young writer's most ambitious novel yet.

The story Peck tells in "Goodbye" is the story of a small Kansas town called Galatea and its legacy of violence and bigotry and unrequired passion. It is the story of what happened one year when two New Yorkers arrived in town and stumbled into that community's dark history of racism and greed. It is the story of the brutal lynching of an albino black man named Eric Johnson, and the young white girl who accused him of rape. And, finally, it is the story of the inexorable hold that time past exerts over time present and the long shadow cast by modernist who uses the gaps, silences and elisions in people's lives to create elliptical narratives that capture the fragmented, fragmentary nature of contemporary life. In the case of "Goodand back and forth among various characters' perspectives - as Faulkner did choral narrative filled with ambiguities

and balf-truths. The reader, never quite sure whom to trust, must slowly piece together the history of Galatea and the events that led, one year, to a series of murders, the brutal rape and abduction of a teenage girl, and a near riot. To answer the detective-story questions "Who kidnapped Lucy Robinson?" and "Who killed Eddie Comedy?," the reader must complete Peck's jigsaw puzzle portrait of Galatea.

Galatea, we learn, is really two towns: Galatea, which is all white, and Galatia, which is all black. Presiding over both is the landowner and moneylender Rosemary Krebs, a sort of female version of the evil banker in "It's a Wonderful Life." For years, the two villages have coexisted uneasily, haunted by the memory of the lynching of Eric Johnson 10 years before and united by a mutual reluctance to talk about the past.

Into this tiny, closed community step Colin Nieman, a wealthy novelist, and his lover Justin Time (who appeared in Peck's earlier novels as the writer 'John''). The two men, reeling from the toll the AIDS epidemic bas taken on their friends in New York and conflicted about their own disintegrating relationship, have impulsively moved to Galatea after visiting a friend of a friend who persnades them to buy a big old house near town. Colin, who has been suffering from writer's block, says he sees Galatea as raw material that can be turned into a novel. Justin -- who may be Peck's stand-in as the author of this novel — says be just wants to keep from being abandoned by Colin.

One month into their stay, something terrible happens: Justin is escorting Lucy Robinson home from a dance when the two of them are jumped by a man clad in Colin's coat and shoes. The "Peck cuts back and forth in time man, wearing a white Klan-like hood, overpowers Justin, leaving him crumpled on the ground, then victously rapes

- to create a Lucy and vanishes with her into the night. Lucy, we learn, accused Eric Johnson of molesting her a decade earlier, thereby setting off the events that led to his lynching.

Has one of the homophobic townsmen tried to implicate Colin in Lucy's abduction in order to drive him and his lover out of town? Does Colin, who has already proved himself capable of violence against Justin, harbor even more dangerous secrets? Does Lucy's disappearance have something to do with the Eric Johnson case? Or has Lucy's onetime benefactor, Rosemary Krebs, set the girl up as a victim to serve her own political ends? Is Lucy's disap-pearance connected with the murder of the redneck Eddie Cornedy, one of the men who lynched Eric Johnson? Or is it related to the assault — and eventual death - of a young street hustler known

Although his language occasionally grows too biblical and too portentous to be plausible, Peck has done a virtuosic job here using narrators to conjure up an entire community, not only delineating the town's social conflicts but also limning the very private sorrows and losses that afflict the individual men and women who live there.

The physical and emotional violence depicted in these pages, which can be as disturbing as anything in a Tarantino or Peckinpah movie, will doubtless shock many readers, but it is ultimately employed in the service of a deeply humane vision. Peck's emotional wisdom about his characters, his narrative sleight of hand, and his observant, unforgiving eye all enable him to turn melodrama into tragedy, horror into something deeper and more affecting.

All of 30 years old, Peck has more than fulfilled the promise of his first two novels. He has given us a big, galvanic novel, a novel that stands as the capstone, thus far, of his impressive ca-

In China's Eyes, Clinton's a Nixon

And That's as Big a Compliment As Beijing's Pantheon Can Hold

By Erik Eckholm New York Times Service

BELIING -- In his global vision, it seems, Bill Clinton ranks right up there with Richard Nixon.

Mr. Nixon will ever be revered here for reviving ties between the United States and the formerly isolated China. Now, before Mr. Clinton arrives for his first state visit to China, he is being lionized in the officia' press and among elements of the intelligentsia as a far-sighted statesman who had the wis-dom to change course with China, shifting from his ini-tial attack stance to his current policy of close engagement. It's a politician's dream:

newspapers, magazines and television shows are showing a deep fascination with Bill Clinton the political leader, dissecting his recent speeches on China policy and extolling China-haters who are uying to derail the emerging "strategic partnership" between the two countries.

The directors of the club which markets books at a discount to its thousands of members through catalogues and seminars like the one Tuesday - assembled foreign policy experts and a few dozen Chinese journalists and book lovers to discuss three major American titles recently published in Chinese.

The first was Mr. Clinton's "Between Hope and History: Meeting America's Challenges for the 21st Century"

(Random House, 1996), the manifesto of his second administration written with William Nothdurft. This month, the book went into its second printing in China after the first several tens of thousands sold out. ("Not quite a 'Titanic' said the book club's editor. Xi Hong, "but a consistent top-seller over the last year.") The second featured title, just published here this week after a rush translation job, was Monica Crowley's new memoir, "Nixon in Winter" (Random House, 1998). The third was Henry Kissinger's 1994 tome "Dinlomacy" (Si-1994 tome "Diplomacy" (Simon & Schuster), which appeared in Chinese last year.

America's Asian Dilemma

Plan A Isn't Working, and There Is No Plan B

By David E. Sanger New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - The Clinton administration has tried to minimize its direct involvement in Asia's economic crisis, pulling strings at the International Mon-etary Fund, sending envoys to cajole foreign leaders and avoiding the lead role Washington took when it saved Mexico from economic implosion in 1995.

But as President Bill Clinton prepares to leave for China, the Asian crisis, in the words of one of Mr. Clinton's top aides, is becoming "worse and worse every day," and it is becoming far more difficult for the leader of the world's largest economy to deal with it at a distance.

For the first time, there is talk inside the administration, and at the World Bank, of the possibility of an Asian depression, which would reverberate deeply in the United States. And Mr. Clinton will end his trip in Hong Kong, once the booming example of Asian free enterprise, whose chief executive declared Tuesday that a deepening recession "is more far-reaching than

Market instability, which a few months ago seemed contained, now amplifies as it circles the globe: Trouble in Sontheast Asia unnerves investors in Japan, the meltdown of the Japanese yen triggers a crisis of confidence in Russia and China, and nervousness in those nations rattles Central Europe and Latin America.

Plan A, a yearlong effort to devise solutions through the IMF and the World Bank, where the United States is the largest and most influential member, is clearly not working. But Mr. Clinton's economic team says that direct American aid to countries in deepest trouble - even Russia, in which the United States has the most at stake - is ont of the question. In short, there is no Plan B.

In the weeks leading up to his trip, Mr. Clinton has delved into some risky market diplomacy — offering symbolic indications-of support for Russia and Japan, in the hope that investors will be calmed by Washington's commitment to financial stability.

Three weeks ago, faced with an immi-nent devaluation of the ruhle that would undercut the government of President Boris Yeltsin, Mr. Clinton backed more international financial aid for the country. Last Tuesday, concerned about an attack on the yen, he approved intervening in the currency markets to prop up Japan. On Friday, he urged China not to worsen a dicey situation by devaluing its own currency, an argument his aides say he will repeat in little power to influence. That is wornsome for three reasons.

Beijing that the United States has relatively loose.

First, there is a fear in the White House that America's yearlong insulation from the Asian crisis may be peeling away.

Mr. Clinton's aides are circumspect about raising these worries in public - for fear of triggering more troubles in the markets - hut Treasury Secretary Robert Ruhin's public comments make it clear he is far more worried about the domestic impact of the Asian crisis than he was two months

"If a major crisis were to develop," he said last week at the White House, "the effects in our nation could be great." He cited the dramatic fall in American exports, the most measurable example.

Others worry that as money pours out of Asia, it is seeking safe haven in the United States — creating a market "bubble" that could collapse when global economic fortunes change and investors sell dollars and re-invest in Asia.

The second concern is more stark: If the IMF is unable to contain the instability, what does Washington do next? The $12 billion U.S. contribution to the bailout of Mexico was an economic success, but it cannot be repeated. Congress refused to back financial aid for America's closest neighbor, and it screamed when Mr. Clinton dipped into a fund under the control of the Treasury and the Federal Reserve.

An amendment to a major budget hill in the House this week would forbid the administration from using the same fund again, a step that Mr. Rubin warned Tuesday would "constitute an unacceptable limitation on the executive branch's ability to protect critical U.S. economic interests. The fund, he noted, was used last year to provide backup to the IMF in preventing an imminent national default in South Korea.

But Mr. Rubin's aides concede that using the fund again, even if Congress enacts no limitation, would raise an uproar - just at the moment the administration is trying to convince the House to approve another $18 hillion for the IMF. Even if Russia needed aid, a senior official noted recently, Where would we get the money?

That leads to the president's third chal-lenge: convincing China this week that it must resist temptations to devalue its own currency, and convincing Americans, via television, that the global economy can do them more good than harm. China has said it will keep its currency pegged to the U.S. dollar, even though devaluations around Asia have made its products less and less competitive.

Uotil recently only computer hobbyists could cajole their computers into acting like telephones. Now, thanks to rapid advances in technology, Internet telephone calls can be made by anyone with a standard touch-tone phone.

The explosive growth of the phenomenon is attracting major telecom-= 33 munications companies, thousands of subscribers and a handful of pirates who sail along the fringes of the law.

Like many Internet developments, these telephone services made their debut in the United States, where they offer transcootinental calls for a few cents per minote, a fraction of the standard rate.

In the past year, however, Internet phone companies have spring up on almost every continent, making rapid inroads into established markets despite their lower quality.

Internet-based calls frequently have annoying echoes, long delays and reduced voice clarity compared to regular connections. But for many consumers, the tremendous cost savings - often more than 50 percent — outweigh the inconvenience. And the technology is rapidly improving. Internet phone calls cross internanonal dorders in a form identical w oormal Internet data. For consumers, Internet phone service works the same way as standard international calling cards: Subscribers use any touch-tone telephone to dial a local access number, followed by an identity code and the oumber they wish to reach.

Behind the scenes, at the local access oumber, the call is bouoced off the traditional phooe network and into the Internet by a so-called gateway computer. In the destination city, the call is brought back out of the Internet and onto the standard phone octwork by the operator's corresponding gateway.

For voice to travel via Internet, the gateway computers translate standard analog telephone signals into digital bits, much like masic on a compact

So by traveling most of the distance as data in the Internet, international calls can effectively be made for the price of two local phone calls.

But cheap calls are just one advantage of using the Internet for telephone calls, according to industry advocates.

But when you make a call using the internet, words, once translated into bits and bytes. move separately along the fastest possible route and then are reassembled in the correct order on the receiving end.

'The technology used in standard telephone systems was developed 40 years ago and is based on old concepts. said Jeff Pulver, president of Pulver, com, an Internet telephone consultancy.

'Internet's efficient digital platform opens the way for many value-added services, like cheap conference calls, videoconferencing and people sharing documents while talking," Mr. Pulver

Because of the low overhead, countries with high-cost overseas calls and recently deregulated telecommunications industries have experienced dramatic shifts of consumers who are moving into Internet-based phone services. In 10 months, an Internet telephone joint venture Jens claims to have grabbed 1 percent of the country's $4.5 hillion outgoing international call market on an investment of less than $10 million.

Deregulated markets will help Internet phone operators swallow 36 percent of the international call market within five years, threatening the core revenue and profits of traditional telephone operators, according to a report released this mooth by the Cambridge-based consultancy Analysys.

Subdued Outlook for Upgrade of Windows

By John Markoff New York Times Service

AN FRANCISCO - For all the dust kicked up in the legal banle over Microsoft Corp.'s right to include Web browsing software in its Windows 95 operating system, a ruling by a U.S. appeals court this week in the software giant's favor is likely to have little impact on the imminent release of Windows 98, a new version that integrates the browser even more tightly. What the dispute has managed to do is to focus attention on a product that bas played to widespread yawns in computer industry publications. In recent weeks, even Microsoft has been playing down revenue expectations for Windows 98, which is scheduled to go on sale at U.S. retail ootlets oo Thursday. Among corporate computer buyers, a consensus appears to be emerging that this upgrade should be skipped in favor of Windows NT, a more powerful ver-sion of the operating system that is designed for large computer networks. Case Corp., a maker of agricultural equipment, based in Racine, Wisconsin, is representative of many corporate buyers who have decided to forgo upgrading their entire company to Windows 98.

'Our strategy is to, in an evolutionary fashion, migrate to NT," said James Hatch, Case's chief information officer. 'We haveo't evaluated Windows 98, and we don't see a compelling need to orchestrate a mass change."

Where Tuesday's ruling might have an impact, analysts said, is in emboldening Microsoft to adopt a tougher stand in its contractual dealings with computer makers and Internet service providers. In the last three weeks, several computer makers have announced that they will ship their products with Windows modified so that it opens with a customized screen that either identifies the hrand or offers icoos that link to sites oo the Internet chosen by the manufacturers. This was a practice that Microsoft had forbidden in its cootracts in recent years but did not fight after the Justice Department included the company's restrictive contracts in the antitrust lawsuit it filed in May.

The court ruling will also put new pressure on Netscape Communications Corp., which created the commercial Web browser market with its Navigator software only to lose much of that market to Microsoft in the past year.

Earlier this month, Netscape executives sketched out a new business strategy: to transform the company's home page into a "portal," an industry huzzword used to describe World Wide Web sites that combine the functions of search engines, Weh directories, news, oo-line shopping and entertainment. However, while NBC and Walt Disney Co. both invested in portal sites this month, analysts have remained cautious about the revenue prospects for such a strategy by Netscape, which has no search technology or content of its own. The popularity of its home page rests primarily with the fact that it is the first site that people see after they install the Navigator browser. As the market shifts toward Microsoft's browser, Netscape's on-line traffic could well sink. In addition, Netscape suffered two setbacks this week. The first involved server software, the programs that run on the large computers that host Web sites. Since competition with Microsoft in the browser market forced Netscape to give Navigator away free, server software has been a main source of revenue. On Monday, IBM announced that it would begin supporting Apache, a free Web server that competes against Netscape's server product.

Then, on Tuesday, the appeals court ruling meant that Microsoft could continue to include its Explorer browser with about 90 percent of all computers sold in the foreseeable future.

In any case, Microsoft executives acknowledge that they are doing less to promote Windows 98 than they did for its predecessor. Analysts say the company is spending about $10 million on marketing versus nearly $200 million for its introduction of Windows 95.

But at least one retail chain is trying to create some interest. CompUSA, the largest computer retailer in the United States, planned to open its doors at midnight on Wednesday in an effort to make the release of Windows 98 a "marketing event," said Larry Mondry, an executive vice president at CompUSA. "I doo't know what Microsoft spent," he said. "The government gave them so much free advertising they probably didn't have to spend as much."

To Get Time to Think, Try Turning Off Your E-mail

ach summer Batya Friedman and her husband, Peter Kahn Jr., both professors at Colby College, take their daughter Zoe and move from Maine to a 670-acre (268-hectare) outpost without electricity northeast of San Francisco. They use solar-powered computers and get to a phone only during twice-a-month trips

If people who are used to reaching her regularly and electronically become frustrated with her absence from the Net, Ms. Friedman advises them to write her an e-mail, print it out, put it in an envelope, and put a stamp on it.

'In the summer, each communication I get I do really read," said Ms. Friedman, who teaches computer science, as she sat in a coffee shop in Oakland, California, as the family prepared to head off into the woods.

'It's an opportunity for focus, and that's harder to achieve when you are so accessible." she said.

Yes, it is possible to be too plugged in. Studies show that electronic mail is slowing down the workplace, and cell phones keep you wired around the world. Weren't most people secretly pleased last month when the malfunctioning Galaxy 4 satellite stifled 50 million pagers, with all the serendipity of a snow day?

Even with welcomed advances of technology like slicker upgrades and faster moderns, the acceleration of information has become troubling. "I'm wondering what the saturation point is of this constant connectivity. said Robert McArthur, vice president for academic affairs at Colby College in Waterville, Maine. "There's a great line from John le Carre, "They're fed up and asking for more.' People are complaining, but they are putting themselves in the way of more connection." People on cell phones are now reachable in their cars on their commute, and time that used to be downtime or transition time is time used by employers," said Gerry Sussman, professor at the School of Urban Studies and Planning at Portland State University. Electronic communications makes possible a much deeper penetration for the commercial use of anything," he said, citing unwanted e-mails, phone solicinations made from computer-generated lists and TV advertisements.

A Southern California philosopher. Michael Heim, worries that the recent mania for information erodes the human capacity for significance. "With a mind-set fixed oo information, our attention span shortens," he wrote in "The Metaphysics of Virtual Reality" (Oxford University Press, 1993). "We collect fragments. We become mentally poorer in overall meaning."

The assumption is you need to be connected the way technology allows you to be connected, 24 bours a day, wherever you are," Ms. Friedman said. "But it's not clear that that enhances the quality of our lives or the productivity of hale and exhale."

Even Microsoft, no enemy of coonectivity, encourages some of its managers to unplug — temporarily. Andrea Tevlin, a consultant at the huge software company says she and some of her senior co-workers are better managers for logging off of e-mail occasionally, for four or five days at a time. 'In a work context, when you pull yourself off-line, you have more time to converse with people, think cooceptually, and think about how to make the burnan system I'm operating in operate differently," she said.

Turning off the technology is also an issue in the realm of recreation. Nothing beats a toy with lots of buttons to push. Mr. McArthur is amused by the gizmos he sees boaters and sailors buying, such as phones and high frequency radios that e-mail transmissions to the middle of the ocean. "This stuff coming in seems to be defeating the whole point of going out on your boat and getting away," he said. "People don't want to get away.

But Mr. Hei, the philosopher, m said humans must do more than unplug, and what they do while unplugged is more important than the length of time they spend away from technology.

'Without rebooting our awareness, it doesn't matter whether we' unplug or not," he said via e-mail, his preferred medium. "Technology retrains our nervous system. It gives us a pace and tempo. We need to actively plug ourselves into the operating system of earth and sky, mountain and river, in-

Malaysian Leader Names Special Economy Minister

Daim Zainnudin Is Considered Pro-Business

Thomas Fuller International Herald Tribun

KUALA LUMPUR - Prime Minister Mahathir bin Mohamad moved ".Wednesday to shore up support for his own economic policies and dilute those of adversaries by appointing a familiar and powerful ally to his cabinet, former Finance Minister Daim Zainnudin.

Mr. Daim, a business-friendly govemment veteran who is considered the architect of much of Malaysia's corporate and economic model, was named minister with "special functions" in charge of economic development.

The functions were not immediately defined, but analysts said that his role would overlap with that of Finance Minister Anwar Ibrahim and that the move thus seemed likely to undermine or weaken the position of Mr. Anwar, who until now has been largely in charge of ecocomic policy in the cabinet.

["The prime minister can now delegate economic tasks to two individuals." a source close to the cabinet told Agence France-Presse, adding that Mr. Mahathir now had a way to "check and balance Anwar," whose support has been growing in the governing party.

["I think it was a shock to Anwar," he said, adding that Mr. Mahathir made the decision to appoint Mr. Daim with-out consulting others.]

The appointment of Mr. Daim, who is credited with helping Malaysia emerge from economic recession during the 1980s as finance minister, follows

Malaysia's first economic contraction in 13 years. The country's gross domestic product shrank 1.8 percent in the first quarter.

Mr. Anwar, who is also deputy prime minister as well as Mr. Mahathir's anointed successor, has often sided publicly with the austere measures recom-mended by the International Monetary Fund, and has tended, on such key issues as bank lending policy, to favor high interest rates

Mr. Daim, himself a successful businessman, is seen as more sympathetic to the plight of companies squeezed by the economic crisis. He has in recent weeks criticized banks for keeping interest rates high, Financial analysts and officials at Malaysia's central bank fear that lower rates could undermine the country's currency, the ringgit.

Anwar wants to take the painful road, which is closer to the IMF approach: Let's close banks and companies which are not performing," said Abdul Razak Abdullah Baginda, ex-ecutive director of the Malaysian Strategic Research Center.

'Daim's argument would be: Do not allow companies to go down. Find a way so that they are restructured and give them a new lease of life.'

Mr. Daim's appointment also served to quash any doubt about Mr. Mahathir's position within his party, the United Malays National Organization, or UMNO — doobts that were raised after a raucous party convection over the weekend.

In what was seen as a jab at Mr. Mahathir's 17-year leadership, the bead of UMNO's youth wing, Ahmad Zahid Hamidi, had called for an end to cronyism and nepotism during a speech to delegates.

At the same time, the Mr. Kiriyenko's proposals drew praise from centrist Yabloko party leader Grigori Yavlinsky, who promised to back the taxreform effort.

Mr. Chubais said that Russia hoped to use part of the currency stabilization loan to restructure its short-term debts, especially ruble-denominated bonds known as GKOs, which have been eating up an increasingly large share of budget revenues. Although the government budgeted 25 percent of spending for debt service, he said, it has already risen to 35 percent. Mr. Chubais, appearing on a television interview show, also said Russia would resist calls from the IMF to break up or restructure Russia's former Soviet monopolies, such as the railroads, the natural gas giant Gazprom, and the electricity monopoly.

OPEC Reaches Deal on Cuts in Output

But Doubts Grow that Cartel Can Reclaim Power to Control Market

By William Drozdiak Washington Post Service

VIENNA --- The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries agreed Wednesday to slasb output in a desperate attempt to curtail a world oil glut that has sent prices plunging to the lowest levels in more than a decade.

In a compromise that delegates say was hammered out at the highest levels between Saudi Arabia and Iran, the cartel's 11 member nations agreed to their second round of production cuts since March that, if successful, would remove a total of more than 2.5 million barrels of oil a day from the global market.

[OPEC oil ministers were meeting Wednesday night to finalize details of a plan to cut another 757,000 barrels in daily output, an OPEC spokesman said, Agence France-Presse reported.]

But serious doubts remain whether OPEC members, whose manipulation of the market sent oil prices soaring and provoked a worldwide recessioo a quarter century ago, can ever again regain discipline over their behavior and exercise the kind of clout over the modem global economy that once posed a direct challenge to the United States and other powerful industrial democracies.

In recent years, OPEC's influence has diminished dramatically as countries outside the cartel like Russia and Norway pump greater amounts of oil and umers in North America and Europe use less energy thanks to mild winters and energy conservation measures.

In addition, Asia's deepening economic crisis has greatly reduced demand in what was once the world's fastest-growing oil market. The first wave of turmoil in Asia struck late last year, just when OPEC decided to increase its output - a decisioo that only accelerated the collapse in oil prices.

After reaching $23 a barrel last October, crude prices fell last week to below $12. While the decision Wednesday to cut output helped push prices above $14, many analysis are skeptical that higher prices can be sustained given the social and economic pressures that compel many states to cheat oo their quotas to bolster their income.

Iran, Iraq and Russia are desperate to pump as much oil as they can to surmount grievous economic problems that threaten social and political stability. While Iraq is supposedly restricted by United Nations sanctions to oil-for-food sales, U.S. officials say Baghdad has been smuggling substantial amounts of oil through Turkey.

While Russia and Iran are eager to sell much more oil, they have reluctantly held off from doing so because of technical problems and fears that a further surge in their output would send prices crashing below the threshold of $10 a

Iran, which is oow pumping about 3.8 millioo barrels a day, agreed to cut back to 3.6 million but only after Saudi Arabia approved a much larger reduction for itself and returned to a level of just above 8 million barrels a day.

A Mongolian Shopping Spree Fizzles

They surged abroad on their first Western-style spending spree, bringing back planeloads of South Korean goods and buying four-wheel-drive vehicles from dealers here.

Now comes the hangover. The spending binge bas ended with a national banking crisis as the Mongo-lian government discovered that no Asian nation is too remote to escape the region's economic downturn.

'Myself, I thought we were an isolated economy, but this shows how we are all inter-related," Finance Minister B. Batbayar said in an interview on Wednesday, adding that the crisis would not slow down liberalization of his country's economy.

Banks made too many loans for the purchase of foreign consumer goods, helping lead to a rise in bad loans and the recent collapse of the state-owned Bank of Reconstruction and Development. For nearly a year after currency turmoil swept across Asia, Mongolia's tu-gain huoters.

Travelers returned with their baggage full of cheap consumer goods. Then a new Daewoo car dealership opened bere, sending late-model off-road vehicles pouring onto the dusty streets of Illaan Baatar.

The country's banks helped pay for the shopping expeditions, extending loans worth 15 billion tugriks during the first four months of the year.

Microsoft Ruling Leaves U.S. With Legal Work Cut Out Consultation

By Elizabeth Corcoran Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON - Microsoft Corp. has won an important victory in its antitrust battle that will force Justice Department lawyers to rework their broader legal strategy against the software developer, observers said.

A federal appeals court struck down a judge's order that would have required Microsoft to let computer makers sell its Windows 95 operating system separately from its Internet Explorer browser software.

The ruling applied only to the Justice Department's limited case, filed last year, that Microsoft violated a 1995 consent decree when it bundled Windows 95 with the Internet software. But legal experts said the bigger case against Microsoft's next version, Windows 98, which bundles the operating system even more tightly with the browser, will need rethinking. The ruling "is a slam dunk for Microsoft and big trouble for Windows 98 goes on sale Thursday. The antitrust case is due to be heard in court in September before U.S. District Court Judge Thomas Penfield Jackson, whose order was struck down Tuesday.

Windows software is used in about 90 percent of personal computers. A key contention in the Justice Department's Windows 98 case is that by requiring computer users to include the Internet product with it, Microsoft is illegally trying

GDP Rises 3.7% in Quarter, Its Strongest Rate in 7 Years

MADRID - The Spanish econ- said omy expanded 3.7 percent in the first quarter of 1998 from a year ago, its strongest showing in more than seven years, as unexpectedly strong domestic demand drove percent. healthy growth.

The National Statistic Institute said Wednesday that the gross domestic product also rose 0.9 percent in the first quarter compared to the fourth quarter of 1997.

That is the highest year-on-year growth rate since the second quarter of 1990, when GDP expanded 3.9 percent.

The data "show that the economy is on a path of sustainable growth and that it has been steadily growing, almost for the third year in a row." said Rodrigo Rato, min-ister of the economy.

The pace of expansion accelerated from 3.6 percent in the fourth quarter of 1997, but it failed to match the average expectation of most economists to see growth of 3.8 percent. "I was expecting a 3.8 percent year-on-year figure and the data is slightly lower," said Leticia Alvarez, an economist at J.P. Morgan

Faster economic growth is vital if Spain is going to cut its unemployment, which, at 19.28 percent of the work force, is the highest in the European Union, even though it is a six-year low for Spain. Creating jobs also is a top priority for the government, now that inflation and public deficits have been pushed down with falling in-full year.

"We expect GDP to remain in line with these figures in the future, perhaps with slightly lower growth rates for investment, which will have difficulty maintaining snch a fast pace of growth," said Antonio Villaroya, an economist at Merrill Lynch in Madrid. Ms. Alvarez of Morgan said sbe forecast the Spanish gross domestic product would grow 4.1 percent in 1998. This level of growth is expected to keep the Bank of Spain from cutting official interest rates this summer although analysts said that the need for European convergence would again become an issue in the second part of the Separately, Luis Angel Rojo, a the governor of the Bank of Spain, said in a speech referring to banking rates, "There is little scope left in the overall large adjustment of interest rates. Power Clash: 2 Executives Quit at EDF

PARIS - The top two executives of France's state-run electricity company resigned Wednesday at the request of the prime minister, the result of an increasingly public power struggle.

Electricite de France's chief executive, Edmond Alphandery, and his right-hand man, Pierre Daures, had been told by the government in March to make peace. But in light of their lack of progress, the government decided to name a new chairman, the Finance Ministry said. Defense Minister Alain Richard's chief of staff, Francois Roussely, a senior civil servant with no direct experience in the electric utilities industry, has been proposed as the next chairman, the government said. The French Cabinet is planning to name the successor at its weekly meeting July 1.

Mr. Alphandery, a conservative former finance minister, told French Radio on Wednesday that his problems with Mr. Daures stemmed from the fact that although he was head of the organization, it was the government who chose his deputy

China Sets Campaign Against CD Pirates

By Seth Faison New York Times Service

SHANGHAI - Accustomed to putting its best face forward for an important guest, China is cleaning itself up for President Bill Clinton's arrival on Thursday.

Not only are roads being repayed, buildings whitewashed and entrance ways decorated on countless rontes where the president is expected to travel during his nine days in China. but the authorities are also cracking down on many of the illegal activities that are ordinarily tolerated these days, like the sale of pirated video and music compact disks.

The fight against piracy of softgare, music and movies, an issue that loomed large in American-Chinese relations a few years ago. has been pushed into the background and is unlikely to be raised seriously during Mr. Clinton's visit, even though it remains as rampant a problem as ever.

An explosion in the video compact disk industry in China in the last two years has created an enormous demand for cheap videos, and pirated versions have been openly advertised and sold in cities all over China.

She expressed approval of Beijing's efforts to crack down on producers of illegally copied disks and cited a laundry list of numbers: 69 illegal producers shut down, 800 arrests, countless master tapes destroyed. Ms. Barshefsky even argued that China had ceased to be a high-scale exporter of pirated goods, moving way down the list of offending countries. "We have a far higger problem now with Italy," she said. ; But industry experts who follow the situation closely say the only

The pirates continue to export from Ma-cao, both to Southeast Asia and even more into China, where demand remains the strongest.

So while Chinese and American officials are each claiming victory in rooting out pirates, more illegally copied material is on sale in China than ever before. And until the recent Phonographic Industries, by far the crackdown, temporary or not, it appeared as if the Chinese authorities had altogether abandoned efforts to

Prime Minister Worries About Recession

By Michael Richardson International Herald Tribune

SINGAPORE — In a move to prevent Singapore from sliding into recession, the government will announce measures Monday to help cut husiness costs, George Yeo, the information minister and second minister of trade and industry, said Wednesday.

Prime Minister Goh Chok Tong of Singapore warned recently that the economy was losing steam amid the recession and falling currencies of Japan and Singapore's Southeast Asian neighbors, especially Indonesia and Malaysia.

Significantly, Mr. Goh did not rule out recession in 1998 or 1999, as other Singaporean officials have done until now.

"However, strong our fundamentals, we cannot escape injury when we are in the path of the typboon, "he said. "The region is in recession. We must be prepared for slower growth this and next year."

The economy expanded by 7.8 percent in 1997, after adjustment for inflation. The government's official forecast of 1998 growth stands at 2.5 percent to 4.5 percent, although this is expected to be lowered Monday when Finance Minister Richard Hu announces the off-budget measures to aid basiness.

The government-linked Developcently cut its 1998 GDP forecast to between zero and 2 percent - below the Ministry of Trade and Industry's estimate.

Hardest hit sectors include the retail sector, tourism, construction and property.

A recent poll by Singapore's Sunday Times newspaper showed that the island-state may barely pull itself away from a recession this year, After more than a decade of with an average forecast of only 1.5 turbo-charged growth, Singapore's percent growth given by 13 finan-

The recession in Japan is of major concern to Singapore because the Japanese are leading investors and their market is Singapore's fourthlargest for exports.

Japan, with an economy that is the East Asian economies comhined, also has a major economic impact on the region, where it is a source of investment, loans and

Mr. Goh warned that if the yen continued to fall, it would put pressure on other currencies in the Asia-Pacific region, including those of China and the United States. "A second wave of currency depreciation and a consequential meltdown of Asia cannot be ruled out," he Indonesia and Malaysia are also major trading partners of Singapore. Indonesia is deep in recession; its economy is forecast to contract by at least 15 percent this year. Malaysia reported negative growth of 1,8 percent for the first quarter of 1998.

As a result, Singapore's retail in-dustry is going through its worst slump ever. "Retailers dependent on the tourist trade and very highend goods are hadly hit," said The Ban Lian, president of the Singapore Retailers Association.

While the Singapore dollar is down against the U.S. dollar, it has appreciated substantially against the currencies of its neighbors.

Consumer spending accounts for over a quarter of the economy of Singapore, which receives more than 7 million tourists a year double its 3.5 million population.

fan noted the presence of the man who is Wimhledon's reigning champion, not to mention the best player in the world. Sampras has been something of an invisible man on the tennis scene so far this season -- the American has won but three tournaments, and played poorly at the Australian and French Opens — but he is looking to turn Wimbledon into his

He continued safely on that path Wednesday. His sandwich finished and his mind quickly focused. Sampras took an easy 6-4, 6-4, 7-6 (7-5) afternoon victory over Mikael Tillstrom of Sweden to advance to the tournament's third round on what was a brilliantly sunny third day of Wimbledon play.

"Weil, I was in a bit of a hurry," Sampras said of his anonymous journey through the Wimbledon grounds. "I didn't really want to be stopped, so I kept my head down. Actually, I felt a little hit rushed going out there."

Sampras was scarfing his lunch in transit thanks to the rapid progression of Wednesday's Court 1 schedule. Slated to play in the third match on the court, Sampras thought he had until late af-ternoon, at least, to prepare. By the time he arrived, though, No. 4 Greg Rusedski had withdrawn from his match (which had been carried over from Tuesday), and Steffi Graf, the first up on Court 1, was up a set and a break on Henrieta Nagyova after just 25 minutes of hlis-

Graf, the fourth seed bere, went on to beat Nagyova, 6-0, 6-4 in ber secondround contest and - with nary a whisper of a problem from her surgicallyrepaired knee - is looking more and more like a serious contender to capture her eighth Wimbledon singles' crown. She was joined in the third round by No. 2 Lindsay Davenport and No. 6 Monica Seles, who both won in straight sets. No. 9 Amanda Coetzer was upset by Naoko Sawamatsu.

Sampras is seeking his fifth title, and it didn't hurt his chances that the hig-serving Rusedski announced he was un-able to continue playing on his sore left ankle. Rusedski had limped his way through two-plus sets against Matt Draper of Australia before rain ended play Tuesday.

To ease Britain's pain, No. 12 Tim Heuman took a four-set victory over David Nainkin on Centre Court to advance to the third round. No. 3 Petr Korda also advanced. But Marcelo Rios of Chile, the No. 2 seed, lost to Francisco Clavet of Spain, 6-3, 3-6, 7-5, 3-6, 6-3 in the first round.

No. 14 Goran Ivanisevic, breaking a recent shump, defeated Grant Stafford 6-

Both Korda and Rios have threatened Sampras's throne this year, with Rios briefly taking over the No. 1 ranking after winning the Lipton Champion-ships in Florida in March.

Sampras, meanwhile, has won just three tournaments, the last in Atlanta, Georgia, in early May.

A torn calf muscle suffered at last November's Davis Cup finals started Sampras's slide, and he was admittedly unprepared to play in the Australian. He continued his poor history at the French Open with a second-round loss to Karol Kucera, who was an upset victim here Wednesday, losing to a qualifier, Vladimir Voltchkov.

Along the way, Sampras's motivation has been questioned not only by outsiders, but by Sampras himself.

"This year, the game's not really been there," Sampras admitted last month. "And the heart and the mind all that's sort of been in the middle somewhere.

Despite that, however, Sampras has no worries about Wimbledon. A fan of American football, he refers to this tournament as "my Saper Bowl," and though he's not expecting to duplicate the total domination that led him to last year's title, he nevertheless has very high hopes, "I'm very keyed up for this event," Sampras said. "I have a lot of good memories playing here, so I have no problems coming here having the year I've had. Hopefully, I can recapture the year here.

■ Capriati Impressive in Victory Jennifer Capriati, playing at Wimbledon for the first time in five years, overcame nine foot faults to beat Nicole Pratt of Australia, 6-4, 3-6, 6-4, The Associated Press reported. It was Capri-ati's first victory in a Grand Slam tournament in five years. "It's great to be back here," she said. 'It hrings back a lot of good memories. I was really pumped up. I was really excited to be out there.

This was Capriati's first Wimbledon appearance since reaching the quarterfi-nals in 1993. She's played in only five other Grand Slam events since, losing in the first round each time.

In 1991, Capriati became the youngest women's Wimhledon semifinalist at age 15. But her career plummeted after she battled problems with drugs and their offensive woes in a big way. One night after getting shut out for the first time this season, the Rangers scored 11 runs in the fifth inning en route to a 16-5 victory over the Arizona Diamondbacks on Tuesday night.

Texas Hitters Break Out of Slump With 16-Run Burst

The Associated Press The Texas Rangers brushed aside

"The hitters were in a slump, that's what everybody wanted to talk about last night," the Texas manager, Johnny

Qates, said. "But over 162 games, this ballcluh will score runs."

The Rangers had scored three or fewer runs in four of their previous six games, including Monday night's 6-0 loss to the Diamondbacks. But they spapped out of it with their fifth-inning outburst, which included a three-run homer by Rusty Greer, a two-run double hy Juan Gonzalez and a pair of RBI singles by Roberto Kelly.

The host Rangers sent 14 batters to the plate and had nine hits in the inning, matching the third-higgest total in franchise history.

Gonzalez increased his major leagueleading RBI total to 91 and Kelly went 4-for-5 with three RBIs and scored four times. Ivan Rodriguez also went 4-for-5 and Will Clark had three RBIs for the Rangers. Indians 5, Cubs 4 In Chicago, Clevcland rallied for two runs in the eighth on Travis Fryman's homer and Pat Borders' RBI single. Sammy Sosa, whose 17 homers in June are one shy of the major league mark for the most home runs in a month, went 0-for-5.

Ken Caminiti of the Padres, right, moving in to put the tag on the Mariners' Dan Wilson, who overran 3d base.

Astros 9. Twins 0 Shane Revnolds (8-5) pitched seven shutout innings and Jeff Bagwell had three RBIs for Houston at the Astrodome. Royale 6, Reds 4 Johnny Damoo drove in four runs with the first twohomer game of his career as visiting Kansas City handed Cincinnati its 10th straight loss.

Braves 7, Yankous 2 Tom Glavine (10-3) pitched eight strong innings and At-lanta scored six runs off Orlando Hernandez as the Braves snapped New York's nine-game home winning streak.

Ryan Klesko went 3-for-4 and Ozzie Guillen doubled twice and scored three times as the Braves won the second of four games scheduled this week between the teams with the best records in Phillies 3, Red Sox 2 Scott Rolen bornered and Mark Portugal pitched his first complete game in two years as Philadelphia earned a victory at Fenway Park.

White Sox 5, Pirates 4 Frank Thomas had two RBIs as Chicago woo at Pittsburgh after building a 5-1 lead. The Pirates scored three runs in the fourth to make it 5-4, but Mike Sirotka (8-7) retired the next 13 batters and Matt Karchner pitched the ninth for his 10th Tigers 8, Cardinals 1 Justin Thompson allowed three hits in seven shutout innings and Gabe Alvarez hit his first two homers as visiting Detroit ended St.

Louis's five-game winning streak. Giants 4, Athletics 2 Barry Bonds and J. T. Snow homered and Mark Gardner pitched seven solid innings as San Francisco won at Oakland for the second straight night.

Mets 6, Orioles 3 The Mets scored three runs off Arthur Rhodes in the seventh inning after a lengthy rain delay at Baltimore. Angels 6, Dodgers 4 Cecil Fielder singled home two runs in the seventh

Dearth of 'Impact Players' Complicates NBA Draft

New York Times Service

VANCOUVER, British Columbia don apartment, Michael Olowokandi opened up a guide to American colleges and universities, turned to the letter "P" and dialed the telephone number of the first school his finger came upon.

"I am Michael Olowokandi and I am 7-1 and I want to come play basketball," he told an assistant coach at the University of the Pacific in Stockton, California. "The coach said 'Well, we'll take you," Olowokandi recalled.
"I was so happy. Organized basketball for the first time. What a great day." Sometimes, all the advance scouting in the universe goes for naught. Three years after that conversation, Olowokandi (pronounced Oh-Lo-Wuh-CAN-dy) sensed he might be the first player taken in the 1998 National Basketball Association draft, which began Wednesday night.

Indeed, it was likely that the 7-foot-1 (2.2- meter), 265-pound (120-kilogram) center - or a player a foot shorter, the Arizona point guard Mike Bibby would be selected by the Los Angeles Clippers with the No. 1 pick.
"It would be the icing on the cake after everything that has happened to me," Olowokandi said Tuesday. "What a story, no?"

Well, yes and no. If you're talking about the son of a Nigerian diplomat living out a Horatio Alger fantasy, yes. But if it is a dream realized for Olowokandi, it is a huge conundrum for most NBA general managers. That a guy who had not played 5-on-5

basketball until two seasons ago could be the No. 1 pick is disturbing, almost as disconcerting as taking a short playmaker who has trouble creating his own shot. "There could be a lot of mistakes made at the top, hot in the middle of the draft you might end up with a better player than you thought you were getting," said the NBA analyst and former coach, Kevin Loughery. "Those first five or six picks, a lot of people are going to be faced with the toughest decisions they've had in years."

Not since the Sacramento Kings opted for Pervis Ellison in 1989 - over Danny Ferry, Scan Elliot, Glen Rice and J.R. Reid - has there been such uncertainty with the top grouping of players.

After Olowokandi and Bibby, duos from Kansas (Paul Pierce and Raef La-Frentz) and North Carolina (Antawn Jamison and Vince Carter) are expected to be taken in the top 10. So are the St. Louis shooting guard Larry Hughes, Michigan's immovable Robert Traylor and Utah's All-American center, Mi-

Orlando and Houston control the middle of the draft, adding to the possibility of last-minute trades. Through prior trades and other deals, the Magic have the 12th, 13th and 15th picks while the Rockets have the 14th, 16th and

18th. Minnesota has the 17th selection. Al Harrington, the 6-9 center from St. Patrick's High School in Elizabeth, New Jersey, and Rashard Lewis of Alief Elsik High School in Alief, Texas, are the best of the younger players. Moreover, a bevy of foreigners - led by the 6-11 German forward Dirk Nowitzki and the 7-foot Slovenian, Radoslav Nesterovic - may also be among the top 20 players chosen in a draft short on potential All-

Stars but long on role players. "As far as impact players, it's not very good," said the New York Knicks' president, Ernie Grunfeld, "As far as depth in the draft, it's pretty solid."

The Boston Celtics, with the 10th pick, are one of several teams looking to possibly trade their selection in order to acquire a veteran player.

LENS, France - Spain trounced Bulgaria, 6-1, on Wednesday for its first World Cup victory, but still failed to qualify for the next round because of Paraguay's victory in the parallel Group D match against Nigeria.

Spain demonstrated speed and skill unseen in its first two World Cup matches against Nigeria and Paraguay. It controlled possession for much of the game, although Bulgaria improved its performance in the midfield and on the attack in the second half.

Fernando Hiero converted a penalty in the sixth minute. He sent Bulgaria's goalkeeper, Zdravko Zdravkov, to his right by placing a shot into the opposite side of the net after a defender, Ivaylo Iordanov, brought down Luis Emigoe as he broke into the Bulgarian box from the

The attacks accompanied Cameroonian government condemnation of officiating in the World Cup after Cameroon was elimated from the tournament Tuesday. "Of course," said Rose Angela, "I'm a Brazil sup-porter. But I won't cry if Norway wins."

Norway did win, and the crying was done in Saint Etienne, to the north. There, Morocco trounced Scotland. 3-0, but went out of the tournament because of Norway's late goals. After the ountials, this had oot been a loving game in Marseille. The Brazilian team, already assured of

It went through the motions, unconcerned that tens of thousands paid to be entertained, taking care not to accrue yellow or red cards. That was the first betrayal. The second was Norway, which, even when coach Egil Olsen knew Morocco was two goals up in Saint Etienne, maintained an unaltered strategy of smothering the game with nine in defense, harassing and holding and checking until, Olsen hoped — and he was proved correct — Brazil grew

That came from the most appalling penalty decision of this or many a World Cup. Even most Scandinavians admit it was a soft penalty. I would say a scandalous one. Viewed with the naked eye, Tore Andre Flo was the aggressor, not the victim, in the collision three minutes from time with Brazil's Junior Baiano. The Norway forward - and I do mean the forward because he so often toiled a lone furrow in attack — is splendidly athletic. deceptively quick and clever on the ground.

But here was aerial combat, the ball swung in high, Flo backing into Baiano, the referee for some reason fooled by the drama of Flo's fall. The-penalty, converted by Kjetil Rekdal's nerveless kick, won the match. It also destroyed at a stroke the merit of Morocco's attempt to

France 'Perfect' Host After Beating Danes

readful Call ails Morocco Triumph Gives Home Team 3-0 Record in Cup

By Christopher Clarey International Herald Tribune

LYON - The Tour de France continues for the bost nation, and so far it has won every stage in style.

First came Marseille on a night when a chilly Mistral hlew but there was no lack of warmth in the stands. Then came Saint Denis, a rough Parisian suburb with a graceful new stadium that already has become a home. On Wednesday, it was Lyon's turn to belt out La Mar*seillaise* and mean it.

It has been an anxious two weeks for France, which has seen its bright and shiny World Cup tarnished by strikes in the air and ticket scandals, rioting andneo-Nazi saintes on the ground. But the French team has yet to be troubled on the field. It won its three first-round games by a combined score of nine goals to one, and its comfortable 2-1 victory over Denmark on Wednesday made it the first team in this World Cup to head into the second round with a perfect record.

Only two other host nations have started as well: Uruguay in 1930 and Italy in 1990. The coming weeks will tell if the French will follow on the heels of Uruguay, which won, or Italy, which lost before the final. What is clear after Wednesday's match is that France has plenty of players capable of contributing.

The French national team has a nickname for its reserves. They are called "les coiffeurs," or the hairstylists, because reserves are able to keep their locks dry and in place as they observe the real players from the bench.

But after three games, the only French players who have yet to perspire for their nation are the backup goalkeepers, Bernard Lama and Lionel Charbonnier. Against the Danes, who also qualified for the second round despite their loss. the French coach, Aime Jacquet, started only four players who had started the opener against South Africa.

Jacquet did this for good reasons, His star playmaker, Zinedine Zidane, is out for two games - including the secondround match on Sunday - after raking start preparing for Nigeria.

his cleats on the leg of a Saudi player. Three other regulars — Captain Didier Deschamps, Bixente Lizarazu and Laurent Blanc — were rested to avoid the risk of picking np second yellow cards that would have knocked them out of the second-round match.

It was a calculated risk: France still needed a draw on Wednesday to clinch first place in Group C. But France has the players to gamble and win, although it doesn't get the chance to see them on its own soil very often. Against Den-mark, France's defensive midfield was made up of Patrick Vieira and Emmanuel Petit, who play together every week for Arsenal in England. Its central defense was Marcel Desailly, who is having a magnificent tournament, and Frank Leboeuf. They will play side-byside for the trendy English cluh, Chelsea, next season.

France's outside fullbacks on Wednesday, Vincent Candela and Christian Karembeu, play in Italy and Spain.

The Danes looked shaky in midfield and lacked speed in defense. But in one of the weaker groups in this World Cup, the Laudrup brothers, Michael and Brian, and their Swedish coach, Bo Jo-hansson, still had enough savvy to earn a date with Nigeria in the second round. The Danes came into Wednesday's match with four points to South Africa's one. They also came in a with a fourgoal edge in goal differential, which meant that even if Denmark had lost hy a goal to the French, South Africa would have had to outscore Saudi Arabia hy three goals. Those teams played to a 2-2 tie on Wednesday.

For a short while, it appeared Denmark might have reason to feel apprehensive. That was after Youri Djorkaeff converted a penalty kick for France in the 12th minute and South Africa took a I-0 lead against the Saudis. Candela then yanked down Martin Jorgensen and Landrup was soon equalizing with a penalty kick in the same stadium where be played in 1984 in the European Championships.

After the Sandis erased the South African lead by converting a penalty kick of their own late in the first half, it was practically time for the Danes to Jacob Larsen of Denmark leaping to kick the ball while Vincent Candela of France remains earthbound.

Draw Eliminates the South Africans

BORDEAUX — Saudi Arabia, already eliminated, played to a 2-2 draw with South Africa in their Group C match here on Wednesday, killing the African's chances of going into the second round. South Africa had to win by at least three goals to overhaul Denmark on goal difference.

U.S. Players Expressing Discontent With Coach

By Amy Shipley Witshington Post Service

NANTES, France — Even with one match still to play, several veteran American players have been expressing dissatisfaction with the strategy and the decision-making enployed by Steve Sampson, the coach. Some players plan to voice their displeasure about a variety of Sampsoo's decisions after the United States plays its final match against Yugoslavia Thursday.

"Everybody's ready to explode." said the veteran defender Alexi Lalas, who did not play in either of the first two matches. "You can get ready for it." Pockets of discontent arose after the team's loss to Germany in the opening game, a defeat that Lalas called "humiliating and embarrassing — an insulting performance to ourselves and all the players that have come before."

The loss to Iran on Sunday escalated some players' frustration. Five new players started, and Sampson brought out a new formation. Some players, though, say the dissension may have begun with Sampson's decisions in April to cut John Harkes, the captain, and install a new formation and a new and less experienced - group of players on the basis of one performance: a 3-0 victory over Austria on April 22. 'It's rather oaive to think that a team that has gone through so much together can basically be rearranged and be expected to play with any consistency and cohesiveness," Lalas said. "It just doesn't happen, especially in soccer."

"If this was the master plan, good god, it was pretty masterful." he said, adding that Sampson's "got a weird definition of a master plan.

On Wednesday, Sampson said that 'to respond to Alexi Lalas' comments would take the focus off the game for Yugoslavia."

'Right now, the focus is on preparing for Yugoslavia,' he said. Sampson did say, however, that people came here to play, they didn't come here to sit on the bench. It's normal for players who don't see playing time to voice frustration."

Sampson took over the team as an interim coach in the spring of 1995 but didn't earn a contract to coach the team in the World Cup until last December. The contract expires after the World Cup. The U.S. Soccer Federation president, Alan Rothenberg, said a decision on Sampson's future with the U.S. team would be made sometime in the month

Asked whether Sampson should remain the U.S. coach, Tah Ramos, a three-time World Cup veteran who was among the five new starters against Iran, said: "Has he gotten the most out of the talent we have? That's really the kind of question the people in charge have to answer. Everybody's got a family. I don't want to be the one to say this guy should lose his joh or this guy should have a joh for the next four years.

"I think a lot of people have a lot of things to say once this is over. I think I'll be one of those guys. Now is not a very good time. There's really oo need to get into any higger of a problem than we have now.

Moses is a firm believer in the Second Amendment and doesn't like schoolchildren shooting schoolchildren any more than their parents do. At the same time, you cannot penalize law-abiding citizens just because a kid is going to lose it when someone at school calls him a name.

Where do the Southern Baptists come in? They come in by ordering their women to submit to their husbands.

How does that fit in with Charlton Heston? It's yet to be spelled out, but I might be bold enough to suggest that if a wife does not submit to a husband she should be shot. I'm not saying that this be done by a member of the NRA, hnt they should have

A Stalemate Over a Classic Chinese Opera

By Seth Faison New York Times Service

S HANGHAI — After a day of last-minute efforts to negotiate a compromise that would permit a local company to travel to New York to perform a classic Chinese opera as a centerpiece of the Lincoln Center Festival next month, cultural officials here continued to block the project. The director of the Shanghai Bureau of Culture insisted that the modern staging of the work was inappropriate for foreign viewers and would not be permitted to travel.

Coming days before the arrival of President Bill Clinton, who is scheduled to land in China on Thursday evening, the artistic controversy threatens to sour an otherwise op-timistic atmosphere that has been carefully planned by Chinese and American officials.

Nigel Redden, director of the Lincoln Center Festival, flew to Shanghai on Monday to try to reach a compromise with the Chinese so performances of "The Peony Pavilion" would not have to be ahandoned. Although the contract between Lincoln Center and the Kunqu Opera Company does not technically involve the Bureau of Culture, its officials have exercised unwritten authority to step in and make decisions.

After an inconclusive meeting Tuesday, ne director of the Bureau of Culture, Ma Bomin, re-issued a statement made last week Bomin, re-issued a statement made last week declaring that extensive revisions of the opera's script were still necessary before it could be approved. It also accused the director hired by Lincoln Center. Chen Shi-Zheng, of introducing "feudal," "ignorant" and "pornographic" elements into the opera.

Redden was more conciliatory, apparently hoping for a last-minute breakthrough even as that possibility seemed increasingly unlikely. "I still hope that we can somehow break the logjam, but I do not have anything positive to report." he said.

The six-part opera was to be brought to France in November. The opera company's containers packed with six tons of elaborate sets, props and costumes are still stranded at Shanghai International Airport, where a cargo flight scheduled for last week was unexpectedly

The control of the chinese viewers could enjoy it. His staging appeared to be a success, with the andience at a decrease of human rights or nuclear proliferation.

Yet the standoff is a reminder of the considerable political power still wielded by a band of ultraconservative officials despite all the liberating social and economic changes under way here. Rather than promoters of artistic performances, cultural officials often view themselves as the last guardians of Communist Party ideology, ontdated and unpopular as it is with most Chinese.

Last week Ma objected to elements of the unorthodox staging of the opera introduced by Chen. It was not political content that offended her but the innovative way that Chen approached the opera, a 55-scene extravaganza that he wanted to stage in its 20-hour entirety. Chen contends that his interpretation of the opera re-creates the original spirit of the work written by Tang Xianzu in 1598 and lost innocuous, nonpolitical sort of cultural ex- over the years as the genre deteriorated, bechange that the Chinese government is trying coming so stilted and lifeless that relatively agency reported Sun's comments in Beijing.

His staging appeared to be a singular success, with the andience at a dress rehearsal in Shanghai this month responding with laughter and raucous applause. Even The People's Daily, the principal Communist Party newspaper, published an enthusiastic review on June 11: "In such an open theatrical environment, the audience is struck by a richly interesting picture of life of ordinary people in the Ming Dynasty." the reviewer wrote. "This opera is intoxicating from the opening moments."

Other official comment also reflected broad approval from the authorities, before Ma stepped in.

Just a few days ago, the minister of cul-ture, Sun Jiazheng, went out of his way to cite the coming performance of "The Peony Pavilion" in New York as a prime example of cultural cooperation to be celebrated during Clinton's visit.

cultural officials in Shanghai opened a personal attack on Chen, who grew up in Chinabut moved to the United States in 1987.

In commentaries published in Shanghai's three major state-run newspapers, the cul-tural officials sharply criticized the director-often in stilted and sometimes xenophobic language commoo to Chinese Communist Party oratory, accusing him of pandering to foreigners, aggrandizing his artistic vision and ignoring sacred traditions.

While the original opera is wildly sug-gestive, a scene of lovernaking between a man-and a ghost occurs behind a screen, without any mudity onstage. As Chen likes to point-out, the eroticism of the opera is refined by: modern standards, just as it was in the works of Shakespeare, Tang's contemporary.

The differences between cultural burean crats like Ma and an innovative director like: Chen represent a distinct clash between old and new in China.

The Bureau of Culture relies on faithful copying of well-known performance methods, and insists on a respect for or at least apassive acceptance of authority. In contrast, young artists like Chen stress creativity, individual thinking and experimentation. It is no surprise that his interpretation of "The Peony Pavilion' appears to enjoy virtually unanimous support from actors young and old in the opera company, including its head, who has a leading role in the opera.

troupes appear, named after specific compa-nies," Ma told Liberation Daily last month. Even Ma's way of making her views pub-lic relied on old-fashioned party indirectness and obscurity, not that it fooled anyone. When she released a statement on Saturday criticizing Chen, she did so without signing any official's name, instead using the "Kunqu Opera Company Performance Gronp, "as though the actors from "The Peony Pavilion" were voicing the objections.

But no actors stepped forward to claim any such view, and the fax number printed on the statement was from the Bureau of Culture.

Rock fans who want to get themselves back to the garden will need to dig deep for this summer's two-day musical bash at the farm of the late Max Yasgur. Tickets are priced at $69.98 a day, quite a switch from the free celebrations of recent years at the natural amphitheater that was home to the Woodstock festival of 1969. Ten Years After will play on Aug. 14, along with Ziggy Marley & the Melodymakers, Stevie Nicks and Don Henley. A day later, Richie Havens, the opening act of the original Woodstock, will perform on a hill with Lou Reed, Joni Mitchell and Pete Townshend.

Everybody is looking for the man in the hat to give him the $38,000 he forgot to take. Officials of an American Indian gambling casino in Arizona said they were stumped in their efforts to find the man who won a jackpot on June 12 but disappeared before he could be paid. "He just walked off." said Sheila Morago, marketing manager of the Gila River Casino. "You tell me why he did it, because we have no idea. You'd think he'd want his money." Casino officials said the windfall could not possibly have come as a surprise: Bells clanged, lights flashed and the machine locked up as it should have. But the mystery man left before casino employees could arrive.
